W. H. O'BRIEN PLEADS FOR FAIR PLAY TO GOMPERS

By WILLIAM H. O'BRIEN,
Ex-President Boston Central Labor Union.

I want to appeal for fair play toward Samuel Gompers and the Bridge and Structural Iron Workers' Union, as an organization.

The great American public can well afford to wait until the atmosphere clears before condemning any man because of the actions of such self-confessed murderers as the McNamara brothers.

If Gompers knew that the McNamara brothers were guilty, as charged, that fact will soon be clearly shown. It also will be easy to learn if the Structural Iron Workers' Union, through its accredited officers, sanctioned the terrible crimes confessed to by the McNamaras.

Organized labor itself can be trusted to deal with both charges. The dismissal of Gompers in disgrace and the dissolution of the Iron Workers' Union will surely follow if these charges be substantiated. Organized labor will not knowingly harbor traitors or industrial outlaws.

But it is intensely un-American, and obviously unfair, to condemn any man unheard. In this, the greatest crisis ever known in the trade union movement the world over, we can well afford to wait for further developments.

BEGIN FIGHT FOR RICHESON

The real fight, along clear, definite lines, for the life of the Rev. Clarence V. T. Richeson, accused of the murder of Avis Linnell, began to-day when his four lawyers saw him in the Charles Street Jail, talked the case over and obtained from the clergyman all the facts that he could marshal that would help him in the critical position in which he is placed.

The attorney who visited Richeson were John L. Lee and Beverly R. Harrison of Virginia and William A. Morse and Philip R. Dunbar of Boston. It is believed that Richeson, who has done much writing of late, has prepared a great deal of matter that will be of use to the attorneys in their legal battle for his life and liberty.

No Letup in Fight.

The fact that Mr. Lee and Mr. Harrison have come to Boston and have opened quarters in a hotel where they will prepare the case, with the assistance of their brother attorneys of Boston, has demonstrated that there is to be no let-up in the fight for Richeson—that there will be no compromise.

This insures the beginning, six weeks from to-day, of one of the most absorbing murder cases that New England has ever seen—a murder case in which a clergyman who stood high in his congregation—a handsome young man of brilliant attainments, will face the death chair on the charge that he deliberately poisoned one girl that he might marry another and richer one.

[illegible] will add to the interest of the [illegible], is the fact that the evidence will be circumstantial. No one saw Richeson give poison to Avis Linnell and the choir singer victim left no word of accusation against the clergyman.

Circumstantial Evidence.

This situation means that the District-Attorney must depend upon circumstantial evidence in his prosecution. The case will recall strongly that of the murder of Mabel Page by Charles L. Tucker, although that tragedy, which absorbed New England for several years, lacked the religious element that enters into the Richeson case.

The case against Tucker was circumstantial, also, but the prosecution had one article that connected Tucker with the Page home on the day the young woman was murdered—the Canadian stick pin. That pin was identified as Mabel Page's. It was found in Tucker's possession.

When it was found at the Young Women's Christian Association that Avis Linnell was the victim of poison, a search was made for something that would show from where the poison came. Nothing was found. So important was this missing link that the body of the girl was disinterred and another examination made. Nothing was found, so far as is known, that would connect Richeson with the poison.

In this gap the defense finds their hope of freeing Richeson. On the other hand it will be shown that Richeson bought cyanide of potassium, that he experimented with it at his home in Cambridge; that he talked over a telephone with Avis Linnell and said, something about meeting her on Saturday (the day she was poisoned) and that he had a powerful motive in getting her out of the way.

Police Hide Their Hand.

It is said that the prosecution has a strong circumstantial case. It may be stronger than is indicated here because the police have not shown all their hand.

The defence will doubtless meet all of these allegations, but as to how this will be done they have been dumb. One thing stands out—that it will be a bitter fight to the end for the man's life.

The first religious service the Rev. Mr. Richeson has heard since, on the Sunday before his arrest, he preached from the pulpit of the Immanuel Baptist Church, Cambridge, was when the Salvation Army visited the jail. Colonel Adam Gifford, head of the Salvation Army, accompanied by his staff, several Army lassies and the Army band, were conducted to the guardroom, where seats had been arranged. A musical program, including instrumental and vocal solos and band selections had been set forth, and as the band entered upon the first selection two long files of women prisoners marched into the room and took their places in the rear seats.

CARDINAL HOST TO BOSTONIANS

BY C. O'CONNELL GALVIN,

Special Representative of the American Traveling with Cardinal O'Connell's Party.

ROME, Dec. 4.—While preparations are on their way for the elaborate ceremonies that are to take place on Friday when Cardinal O'Connell takes possession of the titular church, St. Clement, members of the Boston party that accompanied the Cardinal were rejoicing today over the pleasure of the luncheon and reception accorded them by the Boston prelate at his apartments in Hotel Quirinal.

It was a sort of Boston love feast. It was participated in only by the men in the party. The handsome quarters of the Cardinal were beautifully decorated with flags and the sweet fragrance of bright red roses stole through the rooms.

It was an occasion of good fellowship and one in which each member of the Boston party was permitted to express his feelings over the auspicious occasion that brought them to the Eternal City and pledge his allegiance to His Eminence, the Boston Cardinal.

Toast to President.

Cardinal O'Connell looked in the best of health, as he is and has been every minute of the time since the Canopic sailed from Charlestown with the God-bless-you of thousands of men and women ringing in his ear. Dignified, as always, His Eminence was in a most genial mood. It was apparent that he desired the members of his suite and others who accompanied him to have a part in the general rejoicing that has accompanied the consistorial ceremonies.

His Eminence made a graceful address in which he paid tributes to the Pope, President Taft, Governor Foss and Mayor Fitzgerald. The prayer was breathed that the Holy Father might have many more years of life, that his devotion to the Church might be shown and the great cause of Catholicism advanced.

President Taft was toasted as a statesman who has shown wisdom in his administration and a patriotism that has been without a shadow of turning. Governor Foss was praised as a fair minded man—a governor who had treated Catholics fairly in the matter of appointments.

Praise for Mayor.

Mayor Fitzgerald came in for generous treatment in the way of approval. He was described as a man filled with energy, active and alert in the interest of Boston. Mayor Fitzgerald, it was pointed out, has carried the name and fame of Boston far, and he has ever stood for the upbuilding and progress of the city of his birth and the city over whose destinies he has been called twice by the electors to preside. The magnificent future of Boston as a port and as an industrial centre has been shown to the world by Boston's tireless Mayor.

William F. Kenney, of Boston made a neat speech in which he pledged to the Cardinal the loyal support of the laymen of the State and expressed his gratification over the happy manner in which the ceremonies in Rome had been carried out. The Rev. William O'Brien of Lowell, where Cardinal O'Connell was born, told how that city glowed with pleasure when it was learned that the distinguished honor was to come to her eminent son.

Representing the Cathedral parish in Boston, Dr. Francis X. Mahoney, who has recovered from the injury to his ankle received when disembarking at Naples, spoke of the love of the Cardinal's parishioners for His Eminence.

C. W. Carberry of Boston told how others than those who were Catholics esteemed the cardinal in Boston. He said that Boston, regardless of creed, was proud that one of her sons had been elevated to such a dignity in the Catholic church.

KING'S PRAISE FOR AMERICA

By C. W. WILLIAMS.

Special Correspondent of the American.

ROME, Dec. 4.—His Majesty King Victor Emmanuel the Third, of Italy, has expressed his personal appreciation of the attitude of the AMERICAN toward his country in the present war with Turkey and has directed that a message be sent through this newspaper to the Italians in America by his Minister of Foreign Affairs, the Marquis Di San Giuliano.

Through a communication from Count Giannotti, Prefect of the Royal Palace of the Quirinal, to Ambassador O'Brien, I was summoned to the cabinet of the Foreign Office, in La Consulta, adjoining the Quirinal, where His Excellency the Marquis Di San Giuliano received me.

Not since the days when he was Ambassador to the Court of St. James in London, had San Giuliano, who preceded Premier Giolitti as a directing force in the present war received a newspaperman, and he wished it to appear quite clearly that he was not giving an interview upon the phases of the war, but directing a communication.

Previously I had, through Ambassador O'Brien, requested a direct audience with the King for the purpose of obtaining a similar statement. San Giuliano prefaced his remarks by saying that my letter, which had been forwarded by Mr. O'Brien to the palace, had been read by the King personally and referred to him for reply.

Appreciates Fairness.

He said: "His Majesty appreciates the extreme fairness which the American, almost alone of the papers of the United States, has treated his country in the present situation. The King believes the Italian-Americans rely largely upon it for accurate home information. He therefore regrets his inability to give a personal audience, for inasmuch as he has refused Italian journalists an interview, the Council Ministers decided he could not consistently receive you.

"You may say for us to our countrymen in America that we are very pleased to see such an important paper as yours giving justice to our cause.

"We are glad that through you the truth has been made known in America. We cannot give our plans for the future, but please let our countrymen know we have no cause for anxiety as to what may happen in the home land.

"All Americans should read the facts as you have presented them.

"I had a delightful trip to America once, and I shall always believe Americans are very sincere and honest minded. They seek to know the truth."

From Ambassador O'Brien, who informed me that the Marquis Di San Guiliano was waiting to receive me, I learned further concerning the attitude of the throne in this matter. He said that Count Giannotti, as Prefect of the Palace, has telephoned to him asking to make an appointment at his home.

Expresses High Regard.

"I could not imagine," said the Ambassador, "why he should desire to come to see me, but I learned soon after his arrival that it was His Majesty's command that I should express his regrets to you personally, that the audience could not be direct.

"He added that he wished to reiterate the high regard in which the King holds Mr. Hearst and his newspapers and the position that they have taken.

"His Majesty considered your letter for several days, and evidently consulted his entire ministry before finally referring the statement to the Foreign Office."

At the conclusion of the statement given by the Marquis Di San Guiliano I was informed by His Excellency that henceforth, so far as possible, the resources of the Italian Foreign Office would be placed at the disposal of the AMERICAN so that the exact war situation might be accurately reported in the United States.

He said: "We shall be glad to do this, not only to your correspondent in Rome, but shall facilitate in every way possible the work of your representatives with our forces in Tripoli or elsewhere."

District Attorney Fredericks, Who Prosecuted McNamaras

District Attorney Fredericks of Los Angeles says he has additional information which will lead to more arrests in the great dynamiting case and labor sensation.

OPEN CONGRESS AT NOON TO-DAY

WASHINGTON, Dec. 4.—Staccato raps from two gavels, one in the hands of Vice-President Sherman in the Senate and the other held by Speaker Champ Clark in the House at noon to-day, set in motion the first regular session of the Sixty-second Congress. The sessions were brief to-day, and both Houses adjourned until to-morrow morning, when the President's message will be received. Fully four-fifths of the members were in the seats when the session opened. The galleries were crowded with government officials and members of the families of Congressmen. The gowns of the women and the great array of beautiful flowers upon the desks of the members made a pleasing scene.

Five new members took oath in the House, but one vacancy still remains. It was created by the death of E. H. Madison of Kansas. Two new Senators were sworn; Hoke Smith of Georgia, and Obadiah Gardiner of Maine.

The interior of the congressional building had been renovated during the recess following the first extraordinary session of the sixty-second Congress. The floor of the Senate was covered by a new green and gold carpet.

MAINE BOY DEAD IN MYSTERY SHOOTING

BELFAST, ME., Dec. 4.—Coroner Charles R. Coombs was called to Liberty to investigate the suspicious shooting and killing of Ralph Emerson, aged twelve years, who was shot in an open field yesterday on his father's farm. Three shots were fired before the fatal one took effect. It is supposed he was mistaken for a deer.

40 GUERILLA MOROS KILLED IN BATTLE

MANILA, Dec. 4.—A battalion of the Third Infantry has had a three-day battle with guerilla Moros, who refused to be disarmed. Between fifteen and forty Moros were killed. One American soldier lost his life.

MADERISTS WIN IN CLASH WITH REBELS

MEXICO CITY, Dec. 4.—Conditions in the State of Yucatan continue troubled. After being repulsed once from the town of Halacho, the rebels resumed their attack and took temporary possession, but were forced out by the Maderists. Seventeen rebels were taken prisoners.

MOURN FOR CAT 30 YEARS OLD

A life-long lover of liver and ice cheam, "Brownie," aged thirty years and thought to be the oldest cat in the world, lies buried in the back yard of Miss Frances M. Robinson of Lowell to-day as the result of partaking too liberally of turkey for his Thanksgiving dinner.

"Brownie" wasn't like other cats," said Miss Robinson, his maiden lady owner, sadly, to-day. "He was the greatest lover of liver and ice cream imaginable, and he always drank a pint of water every day. So far as I know he only had one fight in his life—that's the time he got his ear half bitten off.

"He was almost six months old when he came to me, but he wasn't a tramp-cat, although I found him sitting on the top of my backyard fence when opening the door one morning some thirty years ago. No, 'Brownie' wasn't a tramp-cat!

"He was such a dear, unselfish creature, too. He'd often give one of my other three cats a taste of his own food. I guess it was the Thanksgiving dinner that killed him."

Miss Robinson is almost seventy-five years old, and she comes of a long-lived family, her mother having died at the age of 103 only one year ago.

If he had only stuck to his favorite dishes, instead of going in for turkey in his old age, when his digestive organs naturally were impared, "Brownie" might have lived to be fifty years old.

STORM HEADING FOR BOSTON PUTS TO SEA

Boston to-day just escaped a blizzard that swept up the coast from the Virginia Cape during the night, covering New York and other seaports in two to four inches of snow. The storm passed out to sea off the Rhode Island coast, and the worst that Greater Boston will get is a few snow flurries. The forecast as given out by the United States Weather Bureau is: Generally fair and colder; Tuesday fair; diminishing north and northwest winds. A forty-mile-an-hour northerly gale sent shipping scurrying for shelter. None but the big liners dared venture out during the day. A tug with three barges had a bad time off Boston light early to-day. One of the barges broke loose and was picked up with difficulty.

FOSS VISITS TAFT AT THE WHITE HOUSE

WASHINGTON, Dec. 4.—Governor Foss of Massachusetts, accompanied by Representative Foss of Illinois, his brother, called on the President to-day and paid their respects. The Governor said he was on his way North from Charleston, S. C., and his visit to the White House had no significance.

"HECKLERS" GO OUT IN A CART

Driving an old-fashioned cart, drawn by a small bay horse, Miss Margaret Foley and Miss Kate Parsons, the "heckling suffragists," were the centre of attention today in Boston's principal streets.

Huge placards on all sides of the cart announced in bold letters that Mrs. Pankhurst would speak at a big suffragist rally in Tremont Temple to-morrow evening at 8 o'clock.

The adoption of the British suffragists' manner of campaigning shocked many staid old persons who watched the two young women smiling broadly, driving the cart, but from thousands of others the nervy women won admiration and applause.

Large crowds of men and boys followed the cart, and not a few women joined in the possession for several blocks. The boys jeered and hooted; the men cheered; most of the women merely looked.

Land's Sakes! What Next!

"What will those suffragists be doing next?" exclaimed one woman whose manner plainly indicated that she had no sympathy for the equal suffrage cause.

"Courageous women like Miss Foley and Miss Parsons will win us our rights," declared another woman, who was pleased.

"Hooray for the suffragits," yelled a man, whose ultra enthusiasm bore evidence that he was unusually zealous about the cause.

Miss Foley just smiled. "We will let Boston know there is to be a rally," she said to the reporters.

The cart was a one time owned by Mrs. Lucy Stone, founder of the Massachusetts Woman Suffrage League. Starting at the headquarters of the State suffrage league, the women drove down Boylston street and then circled Tremont and Washington streets.

Large placards on the cart pleaded for "Votes for Women." Attached to the horse's head were large yellow paper plumes.

"Why didn't you get an automobile?" someone asked Miss Foley.

"This is better," she replied. "It saves expense, and besides with this we don't need a press agent. It is so unique."

PACKERS FIGHTING FOR MORE DELAY

WASHINGTON, Dec. 4.—Counsel for the indicted Chicago meat packers to-day filed a brief with the Supreme Court petitioning the court for a writ of supersedeas. This is aimed to delay the trial set to begin Wednesday in Chicago.

JUROR ADMITS BRIBERY

LOS ANGELES, Dec. 4.—Three new names were to-day dragged into the jury bribery scandal that marked the sudden close of the trial of the McNamara brothers. Robert Bain, sworn juror in the case, his wife, and an unnamed agent of the McNamara defence, have played a part in the transactions, according to a confession made by Bain.

This revelation has increased interest in the hearing of Bert H. Franklin, the defence detective, charged with having bribed Venireman George N. Lockwood. At 10 o'clock Franklin was summoned to appear before Township Justice Young. Late yesterday it was agreed between counsel that a continuance be granted.

The publishing of the statement made by Bain that he was involved in the bribery transactions caused a report to-day that the district attorney's hand had been forced and that he would push the case against Franklin at once, bringing out the evidence that is said to connect some of the "high-ups" of the defence with the story. That this was true was believed from the statement of Mrs. Bain herself when asked who had paid the money which she admitted she had accepted. She refused to name the agent who had brought the money.

"I will not say who it was. It was not Franklin, though. The district attorney knows about that, too. It may all come out after the Franklin trial," she said.

Key to the Bribe Plot.

The connection of Bain with the bribery case is one of the minor tragedies of the trial. Bain, sixty-nine years old, a carpenter, at the very beginning of the examination of jurors, gave the key that the men who bribed his wife used. Asked if he owned his home, he said: "Well, I will when I get it paid for."

It was this unpaid for home which furnished the chance for the briber. According to Mrs. Bain, detectives and other persons came to her home and asked her about every detail of its purchase. She was asked a dozen times how much it cost; whether it was paid for; what the next payment amounted to, when it was due.

They harped on the subject. They called on her at all hours until she said she was fairly distracted. In the meantime her husband sat in the court room day after day. Their living depended on his wages as a carpenter.

These were suddenly ended and instead of them the scant $2 a day paid by the State for jury duty was substituted. The question of meeting the payments became more pressing. Then the briber appeared. He suggested that there was an easy way to meet the payments and finally Mrs. Bain agreed to accept $500 as part payment of $5,000 if her husband would vote with the defence when the McNamara trial came to an issue.

Bribe Money is Returned.

A statement of the whole affair was made to the district attorney on Friday, the day that the McNamaras confessed. The money paid Mrs. Bain was turned over to him and Mrs. Bain signed the statement.

To-day when seen by an AMERICAN representative, the aged juror was overcome with the shame of the transaction. He refused to say whether he was a party to it or not. He declined to admit that any knowledge of it had come to him until after the dismissal of the jury. He simply admitted that his wife had taken the money and said, "It is a bad business. I am terribly sorry for what she did."

Mrs. Bain was a frequent visitor at the Hall of Records while her husband was in custody with the other jurors. She was a cheerful, amiable little woman and came to be very popular with the deputies in charge of the jury and Bain himself was regarded with a sort of filial affection by the bailiffs, deputy sheriffs and the newspaper men who watched him day by day.

Has Full Confession.

Captain Fredericks announced, following the arrest of Bert Franklin, that Franklin had said to Lockwood that two jurors in the box were bribed. Captain Fredericks has since stated that he has full knowledge of the transaction, and that this knowledge coming into possession of the defence was one of the factors of the sudden agreement of the defence to the terms of compromise which he offered. He stated to-day that the bribe money paid to the wife of one of the jurors had been paid over to him, along with a full confession of the affair. He said at the same time that the other jurwho had taken money himself had not come forward and made full breast of it.

"He must do this by to-morrow," said Captain Fredericks. "I will give him that long. But if he does not come around to-morrow with the money and a full confession he will have trouble on his hands." Fredericks has declined to say whether he will prosecute the bribe takers on the jury or rest content, now that the case has ended, with prosecution of the bribe givers.

Great Conspiracy Exposed.

"The United States government and California authorities are co-operating to uncover one of the most gigantic conspiracies ever conceived," was the declaration to-day of Assistant District Attorney W. Joseph Ford, second in command to District Attorney John D. Fredericks and the man who was arrested in Indianapolis for illegal extradition of John J. McNamara.

"It is only a question now of whether the Federal government or the State authorities can reach certain persons better and bring them to justice more effectualy.

"The federal officials have shown every disposition to assist us and we are helping them as much as possible."

Mr. Ford admitted that the prosecution had under surveillance in other parts of the country prominent leaders alleged to have been involved in the Times explosion, but admited that arrests might be made by the federal government.

The vigor with which the federal government is pressing its investigation into the conspiracy which is alleged to extend over the entire country has been increased within the last fortnight, according to well-informed persons here, and in proof of this it is observed that United States District Attorney A. I. McCormick now is in Washington and United States District Attorney Miller of Indianapolis and District Attorney Fredericks are in close communication. Evidence desired by the federal grand Jury in Indianapolis from this city will go forward as quickly as it is asked for. The ramifications of the alleged conspiracy are said to be so extensive that the subject has been brought to the attention not only of President Taft but of Attorney General Wickersham.

M. A. Schmidt and David Kaplan jointly indicted with the McNamaras for the Times disaster have not been captured, but the State, it is believed, has a good clew to their whereabouts and they may be arrested within a fortnight.

Tells of Plan to Burn City.

"If another dose of dynamite doesn't unionize Los Angeles we'll blow up the water works and explode enough mines to burn the city! We can give them till their proposed Panama exposition in 1915, and if they haven't mended their ways by then we'll make that place an example the world will always remember."

This, according to a heretofore unpublished portion of Ortie McManigal's confession, was the substance of a threat made by the McNamaras after they had blown up the Los Angeles Times and murdered twenty-one of its employes. The plan was discussed, McManigal said, in connection with his trip to Los Angeles last Christmas, when he dynamited the Llewellyn Iron Works—the crime to which John J. McNamara pleaded guilty of being the instigator.

McManigal, who was James B. McNamara's chief assistant in more than a score of dynamite outrages, was sent here to "give the Times a second dose." Undeterred by the appalling loss of life in the Times disaster, the McNamaras determined to break the defiant spirit of General Harrison Gray Otis, owner of that paper, by placing a bomb against the auxiliary plant in which the paper was published after its main building was destroyed. McManigal confessed that he came fully intending to blow up the auxiliary plant.

"Second Dose for Times."

"But when I got here," explained McManigal when retelling his story, "I found the place so closely guarded that I couldn't do anything without taking some lives. So far as I am aware, my stuff never killed anybody; I was always careful to set my clocks to go off when there would be nobody on the job. And I wasn't going to be a murderer even to 'get the Times,' so I took the suit-case bomb which I had brought on a passenger train from Chicago and left it at the Llewellyn Iron Works."

It has not been the intention of the prosecution to make public many of the details of the McNamara's campaign of destruction until after they are sentenced next Tuesday. As District Attorney Fredericks has stated, he does not consider that his duty is to solve the graver social problems that have been raised by the McNamaras' confession that they resorted for years to dynamite as organized labor's weapon of industrial warfare. Captain Fredericks considers his duty done when he has dealt with the specific cases of murder and attempted murder for which the men are to be sentenced.

The degree of the McNamaras' guilt is not, therefore, to be judged legally by McManigal's confession, although it attributes to the confessed dynamiters zeal that would destroy the entire city and endanger perhaps hundreds of lives, following the first sacrifice of twenty-one.

As McManigal related the plan which he says was discussed by the McNamaras, it designed simultaneous explosions of the McNamara clockwork bombs, one at a vital point in the city's water supply, which would leave the entire town without protection, and four or five other big mines under buildings in widely separated sections, so as to encompass the city's complete destruction by fire.

Lockwood's Story.

The hearing in the case of Bert H. Franklin, the defence detective, scheduled for to-day will be postponed a week, by mutual agreement. Los Angeles is for the most part a city of wood. Only in recent years has there been any considerable brick and concrete construction, excepting in the business centre. Apartment houses of two and three stories entirely of redwood and pine are still being erected. The hills which give such a charm to the city's residential districts are covered with frame bungalows. A fine town for a conflagration!

It appears, from what McManigal is known to have told in his confession, that the McNamaras, while alarmed by the unexpected loss of life in their dynamiting of the Times, were surprised and chagrined by the failure of that outrage to break the defiance of unionism of General Otis and the Los Angeles Merchants and Manufacturers' Association.

It may be that the disclosures will be forced, for Talesman George N. Lockwood to-day told of a man, whose name had not previously been brought into the case, being present when Franklin, Captain C. F. White and he were arrested after the $4,000 had been passed, $3,500 to White and $500 to Lockwood.

"I was approached by Franklin, with whom I was acquainted, about a month ago," said Mr. Lockwood "At that time he told me my name was on the jury list and I might be called in the McNamara case. I was told that the defence was having a hard fight and that Mr. Franklin was investigating the jurors. He said there might be money in it for a man who got on the jury.

"I reported the matter to District Attorney Fredericks and he told me to wait until my name was drawn from the list. After my name was drawn I was approached with an offer of $2,000, and this was afterward raised to $4,000.

"I had several conferences in the yard near the barn. Detective Browne and his men were concealed in a tank over the well and they overheard the conversations in which the money was offered to me to hang the jury. They heard the statement that two of the jurors had been fixed and there might also be another.

"With the knowledge of the District Attorney it was arranged that the money should be paid on the corner of Third and Los Angeles streets, that I should be given $500 and that Captain White should hold the $3,500 until after the trial.

"When we met on the corner, Captain White showed me the $3,500 and as we walked up Third street, Franklin gave me $500. As he paid me the money a man stepped up and said to Franklin: 'That is all right.' Then the detectives came up and arrested Franklin and me and pushed the stranger out of the way.

Willing to Sacrifice Life of James, Says Fredericks

I could have settled this case last Summer if I had been willing to let John J. McNamara go. They were willing to sacrifice James B. They were willing to have him plead guilty and be hanged if I would let John J. go.

About a week ago O. S. Brandt, who had previously called upon me to say that many believed that if the men would plead guilty it would be the best way out of it, came to me with a typewritten statement of what he said the defence was willing to do. That statement read like this:

"J. B. McNamara to plead guilty in the case now on trial and to receive any sentence except death. All other cases against J. B. and J. J. McNamara to be dismissed."

When I saw the paper the phrase "to receive any sentence except death" had been crossed out. Mr. Brandt told me he had said that I would never agree to that. Then he had been told over the telephone to cross it out.—Statement by District Attorney Fredericks.

New Arrest May Be Made.

"I did not know this man, but a name was mentioned."

Mr. Lockwood was shown a photograph of a man who has been connected with the McNamara defence and he said:

"Yes, that is the man who told Franklin it was all right after the $500 had been paid to me."

It is evident from Lockwood's statement that if the prosecution of Franklin goes on, Lockwood must reveal the name of this man in court, and then an arrest would be inevitable.

That a crisis in the bribery issue is impending there is little doubt. A few days must precipitate another climax in this phase of the McNamaras' cases, and when it comes the public will be little less astounded than by the episode of Friday afternoon in Judge Bordwell's court room.

Other moves that are corelated to the McNamara cases are soon to be made. Ortie E. McManigal is to be sent to Indianapolis by Fredericks at the request of the Federal prosecuting authorities, to become a witness against several men who the United States District Attorney at Indianapolis will cause to be arrested upon charges of complicity in a dynamiting conspiracy.

Fredericks has information, he says, that several men whose names figure in parts of McManigal's confession that have never been made public are to be indicted and tried in the United States Court in Indianapolis.

Other Prosecutions Coming.

"Other prosecutions of even greater importance than our cases against the McNamaras are to come," said the District Attorney," but I shall have nothing to do with them. The further prosecution of the dynamiters upon the evidence which was obtained in Indianapolis is out of my hands."

It is not unlikely, however, that Captain Fredericks will clean up the Los Angeles Times dynamiting case by disposing of M. F. Schmidte and David Caplan, two men who were indicted for complicity in the crime to which James B. McNamara has confessed by his plea of Friday. There need be no occasion for surprise if soon after the McNamaras are sentenced, Schmidte and Caplan are brought into court here to plead guilty and take jail sentences.

Neither Schmidte nor Caplan was in Los Angeles the day the bomb was exploded in the Los Angeles Times building. James B. McNamara brought the dynamite here and was solely responsible for the homicide.

This he will admit, after he has been sentenced.

Believe Caplan Alive.

Caplan several weeks ago was reported to have been killed in Washington, but Fredericks believes he is alive and in Europe. Detective Burns's trip abroad during the Summer was made in the hope of apprehending Caplan. Schmidte, who disappeared from San Francisco soon after the destruction of the Los Angeles Times, is understood to be in New York and may readily be reached if he is willing to plead guilty and go to the State Penitentiary.

James B. McNamara and his brother, John J., will make statements after they are sentenced by Judge Bordwell to-morrow morning.

The younger of the two brothers, who is almost certain to be sentenced to imprisonment for life, will accept the sole responsibility for the Los Angeles Times explosion. He will implicate no others. This is the intimation which the attorneys for the defence gave to-day.

"Jim" McNamara will admit that he came to Los Angeles with nineteen sticks of dynamite in his suitcase with the intention of damaging the Times Building, but not to destroy it or to kill or injure any one. He will acknowledge that he was in the city several days and made trips to the building to select the place to plant the bomb.

What "Jim" Will Admit.

He is expected to tell of meeting a man in Ink alley, which extended beneath one end of the structure, the day he walked in with the bomb in his suitcase. The man, an employe of the Times, accosted Jim McNamara and asked him what he wanted.

"I am looking for the ad. room," said McNamara, and when he was directed he went on down the alley, up a short flight of steps and out of the building by another exit. Later he returned and left the infernal machine. This man who spoke to McNamara was to have been one of the principal government witnesses had the case gone to trial.

"Jim" McNamara will do all he can to lessen the burden on John J. When the two men were discussing with their attorneys the proposition to plead guilty, "Jim" McNamara offered to go to the gallows if he could thus secure the freedom of his brother.

John J. McNamara's statement, to be issued after he has learned his fate from Judge Bordwell, will, it is understood, be practically a confirmation of Ortie E. McManigal's confession that he came to Los Angeles with dynamite, at the instigation of the elder McNamara, to demolish the plant of the Llewellyn Iron Works, in order to frighten the managers of that institution into making a settlement with their striking employes.

Will Take All Blame.

In acknowledging his part of the crime, which McManigal was unable to carry out as had been planned, John J. McNamara will not involve any one else. It is not his intention, counsel has indicated, to make charges against any of his associates on the executive board of the Iron Workers' organization, but rather to stand as the sole conspirator with McManigal.

Clarence S. Darrow says that the McNamara brothers are willing to take their punishment, but do not propose to become witnesses for the prosecution of others. The two men will do their utmost to relieve organized labor of the odium of the dynamite outrages to which they have pleaded guilty. They wish to make this a personal issue rather than one of organized labor.

Whatever prosecutions follow in Indianapolis will be without the assistance of the McNamara brothers.

Clarence S. Darrow indignantly contradicted Fredericks' statement that the defence would have been willing to let James B. McNamara hang, if that would have secured the release of John J.

"I would never have consented to any arrangement which meant the execution of James B. McNamara," Mr. Darrow said when told of District Attorney Fredericks' asertion.

"My purpose from the day I was brought into this case was to save the lives of James B. and John J. McNamara if possible. We never told Captain Fredericks that we would agree to the execution of J. B. if he would dismiss the indictment against John J. No one was ever authorized by us to make such an offer.

Ready to Go to Gallows.

"James B. was willing to be hanged, and would go to the gallows now if by doing so he could save his brother. But we have never considered for a moment sacrificing him.

"We were in a desperate position, and if the trial had gone on both men would probably have been hanged. We were as anxious always to save James B. as we were John J. McNamara.

Mr. Darrow has expected bitter criticism from the leaders of organized labor because of his part in the surrender of the McNamaras to the superior force of the State's evidence against them. He was not surprised at the comments of the leaders, but he was hurt by the printed statement of Samuel Gompers that Mr. Darrow deceived him and had imposed upon him.

"Samuel Gompers never asked me whether John J. and James B. McNamara were guilty or innocent," said Darrow.

That was all the reply he would make to the head of the American Federation of Labor.

"The United States government and California are co-operating to uncover one of the most gigantic conspiracies ever conceived in the history of this country," declared Assistant District-Attorney W. Joseph Ford. "It is only a question of whether the Federal government or the State authorities can reach certain persons and bring them to justice more effectually."

He admitted that the prosecution had under surveillance in other parts of the country prominent labor leaders alleged to have been involved in the Times Building explosion, but he said arrests might first be made by the federal government in its investigation.

"The federal government has shown every disposition to assist us and we are helping them as much as possible," he said. United States District Attorney A. L. McCormick is in Washington, and United States Attorney Miller of Indianapolis and District Attorney Fredericks are in close communication. Evidence desired by the Federal Grand Jury in Indianapolis from here will go forward as quickly as it is asked for, Mr. Ford said.

More light has been thrown on why John J. McNamara pleaded guilty to the charge of dynamiting the Llewellyn Iron Works and why the State did not insist on a plea as to indictments against him for having with his brother, James B., wrecked the Times Building, and caused the death of twenty-one persons.

It was asserted that John J. McNamara could not have been sentenced for a greater crime than that of manslaughter for the Times disaster because he was not in California at the time. The sentence on that charge is only from one to ten years.

State officials said that before the McNamaras confessed, knowledge of the State's intention to try to involve other labor leaders in the case reached counsel for the defence because of the activity of the prosecution with certain important witnesses.

"Many witnesses came over to us in the last few weeks," said Mr. Ford, 'and brought with them money used to get them. The fact is, we frustrated the plans of the other side to win by illegitimate means and they knew they could not win if they took chances on legitimate procedure, because we had a chain of damning evidence."

Did Not Tell Gompers.

"So far as I know, President Gompers of the American Federation of Labor knew nothing of the intention to have the McNamaras plead guilty," said Clarence Darrow. "Whether he knew they were guilty or not, I cannot say, for I don't know, but he did not learn that they were from me or any one with whom I have had dealings.

"It is true that I wired Mr. Gompers a week ago asking him to come to Los Angeles or to send some representative of the American Federation of Labor for a very important conference. It was to discuss the preparation of a plea of guilty that I wanted this conference, and I tried to make my message convey the information that haste was necessary and the situation was critical.

"What he thought I meant by the message, I don't know, but he acted and sent Edward Nockols, secretary of the Chicago Federation of Labor, and a man in whom Mr. Gompers has implicit trust. Mr. Gompers instructed him by wire so he evidently knew that something important was brewing. Mr. Nockols came here as directed and we had the conference at which I told him it would be impossible to save either of the brothers with the evidence the prosecution had against us. I urged that the plea of guilty be entered in the hope of saving a human life.

"Whether Mr. Nockols notified Mr. Gompers of the conference or results I don't know. Mr. Nockols agreed with us that a plea of guilty was the best step to take, and, as Mr. Gomper's representative, he acted for the American Federation of Labor."

M'NAMARA ISSUE LIKELY TO SWING THE CITY ELECTION

LOS ANGELES, Cal., Dec. 4.—This city to-day is upon the eve of the most momentous municipal election in its history, for despite all efforts to the contrary, the McNamara case has become an issue.

Job Harriman, one of counsel for McNamara, but who knew nothing of the negotiations which led to the brothers' confessions, is a candidate for Mayor on the Socialist ticket, with a full ticket behind him. The situation has become further complicated by women's suffrage, and it looked to-day as though the women would dominate the situation to-morrow.

Women political workers made a house to house canvass in the interest of the Socialist ticket, working upon the sympathies of other women voters by describing the hardships and privations which the McNamara brothers were enduring as a result of a capitalistic conspiracy. When the confessions came it left the situation so far as it concerned the Socialists, in a tangle.

Mayor George Alexander is Mr. Harriman's opponent, heading the Good Government ticket. Predictions were made to-day that despite the fact that Harriman had a plurality of six thousand over Alexander in the primary, Alexander would be re-elected to-morrow. There are 180,000 electors in Los Angeles, of whom 85,000 are women who never before cast a vote. Prohibition enters into the many sided issues of the campaign. The police department to-day began making elaborate preparations for policing the polls, for a reign of violence is expected about the polling booths in the sections where the rougher element lives.

R. H. DAVIS HUNTS SISTER

LONDON, Dec. 4.—Richard Harding Davis, who came to London in response to a cablegram from his sister, Mrs. F. Percival Farrar, stating that she was in great trouble, has disappeared from London, and is believed to be conducting a systematic hunt for his sister on the continent.

When Mr. Davis arrived in London on the Mauretania last Tuesday he communicated by telephone with Sandringham, where Mrs. Farrar's husband had been chaplain to the King and honorary domestic chaplain to Queen Alexandra. He was informed that not only had Mr. Farrar been deprived of his rectorship, but that he, accompanied by Mrs. Farrar, had left Sandringham suddenly on the day before.

Sister's Flight a Mystery.

When Mr. Davis investigated further and found that Mr. Farrar had been accused of misconduct he understood why Mrs. Farrar had cabled "Please come at once; am in great trouble," but he failed to understand why she should have gone away with the rector just before he arrived. When Mr. Davis inquired further into the matter, however, he ascertained that Mr. Farrar had been quietly warned by the authorities of the fact that application was being made for a warrant for his arrest and an opportunity had been given him to leave the country in order to avoid the scandal of a trial that would have involved the highest names in the kingdom.

Davis Is Anxious.

The issuance of this warrant explained Mr. Farrar's flight, but it failed to explain why his wife, who had cabled for help, should have gone. Mr. Davis, when last seen by his friends, was nearly crazed with rage and anxiety and could only explain his sister's disappearance on the supposition either that she had been kept in ignorance of the real charges against her husband, or that she believed him innocent.

Mr. Farrar is a son of the famous Dean Farrar and had been chaplain to the royal family for a long time, having confirmed the Prince of Wales. The alleged conduct on which present charges are based, occurred since his wedding last July. The English newspapers have all been warned by a court representative to make no mention of the charges.

Infanta Eulalia Defies Order of Alfonso to Suppress Her Book

King Fears Princess Has Written a Story that Will Prove to Be a Shock.

PARIS, Dec. 3.—A series of sizzling hot telegrams have been exchanged between King Alfonso of Spain and his aunt, the Infanta Eulalia, who is well known to Americans and who is a resident of Paris. First of all the King writes:

"I am astonished to learn by the newspapers that you are publishing a book under the pseudonym of 'Countess d'Avila' and from other news I suppose the book will cause a great sensation. I order you to suspend this work until I have taken cognizance of the book and authorize its publication.

To this peremptory order from her nephew, the Infanta replied:

"I am astonished that any one should judge a book before knowing what it is. Such a thing is only possible in Spain. Never having loved court life, I take this opportunity to bid you good-by, for, after such a proceeding, which is worthy of the Inquisition, I consider myself free to live in private life as seems good to me."

The Infanta Eulalia intends to sell all her property in Spain. The book referred to is entitled "Life's Thread." It is written in French, but has not yet been published. It pleads the cause of divorce in the name of reason and loyalty.

Infanta a Radical.

The Infanta is a radical feminist. She declares that a woman in principle is a man's equal. She should therefore become his useful co-worker and be his unceasing and kindly comrade in his joys and hardships."

The book, according to a critic, is written in the sober style of Caesar's "Commentaries."

Another account of Eulalia's book says that in it she emphatically disapproves of court ceremony and welcomes perfect Socialism on condition that art be free and thought unoppressed.

One chapter deals with the servant question. The Infanta says servants should be independent functionaries working by the hour, each in his or her own lines, and inhabiting special buildings, much after the ideas of M. Fournier.

It will not be surprising if the church in Spain is shocked at the Infanta's book. In one part she says, referring to marriage, that she "is unable to accept as a sacrament a terrestrial bond which is often more material than spiritual." Another chapter of the book on matrimony says marriage is based on a contract, and any contract can be rectified, modified or broken. Divorce, the Infanta declares, is useful and necessary.

Compares the Sexes.

"Moral women," says the Infanta, "are more moral, more virtuous and more sober than men."

In another place she says: "It is said to be sufficient for woman to be beautiful and a mother. That is [illegible] stupidity. A woman like a man is entitled to complete development of her faculties."

The Infanta is not enthusiastic over the bourgeoisie, but says she loves the people. She declares that workers are the greatest factors in a nation's hope and she wishes to see them educated with pride in their condition instead of hatred of the upper classes.

King Alfonso is twenty-five years old. The Infanta Eulalia is forty-seven. The Princess and her husband, Prince Antonio of Bourbon-Orleans, were legally separated in June, 1900. Eulalia tried to coax the Pope to sanction an absolute divorce, but got a sharp lecture instead.

It is no news to Americans that the Infanta's ways are unconventional, for she spent several weeks in America in 1893 as the guest of the country and the representative of the Queen Regent, mother of Alfonso XIII., at the Chicago exposition.

14 CITIES WILL VOTE ON LICENSE

One of the fiercest fights ever waged in Massachusetts on the liquor question will begin to-morrow when fourteen of the thirty-three cities, scattered all over the State, will decide whether they will be wet or dry in 1912.

Incidentally, ten of the fourteen cities will elect Mayors; two will fill out commissions by the election of new board members, and two, whose Mayors are elected for two-year terms, will vote for aldermen and school committees.

Haverhill and Gloucester fill out commissions, while Springfield and Fall River have two-year Mayors. Brockton, Fitchburg, Holyoke, Marlboro, New Bedford, Northampton, Pittsfield, Quincy, Taunton and Waltham choose Mayors.

It is the liquor question that is the main contention in each of these places. Both the wets and the drys have been waging a tremendous campaign for months, and during the last few days rallies and newspaper advertising has been the order all over the State.

The energy with which the drys have conducted their campaign is shown by the fact that even in such well-known no-license cities as Brockton and Quincy, one of which went for license just once and that is fourteen years ago, big rallies were deemed necessary.

DARK DAY RECORD DURING NOVEMBER

AMHERST, Dec. 4.—Good Old Sol almost gave this State the goodby during last month, as has been disclosed by a careful record of the sunshine with which this section of the earth was blessed during November. Professor J. E. Ostrander, meteorologist of the Massachusetts experiment station, reported to-day that there was less sunshine in November than in any other month since the station was established. There were twelve rainy days and snowfall on six days.

$1,000,000 LOSS IN JERSEY FIRE

JERSEY CITY, N. J., Dec. 4.—Fire destroyed the stables of the United States Express Company at Eighth and Henderson streets, here to-day, causing the death of 300 horses, in burning two firemen and doing damage estimated close to $1,000,000.

Two firemen were hurt by falling debris but neither one is in a serious condition. One person is missing. Frederick Orckray, a watchman, is believed to have perished.

The fire again broke out shortly after 8 o'clock and spread to small tenement buildings, making forty families homeless. They were driven out into a raging snowstorm, many of them losing all of their belongings. Firemen were still playing water upon the smoking embers when the flames again broke forth. Fire Chief Conway said, however, that his men would be able to keep the fire from spreading further.

More than 600 horses were stabled on the second floor. On the top floor all the records of the company since its organization were stored. They were valued at $1,000,000. A large amount of money is in safes on the top floor.

The fire was discovered at 2 a. m. Feeding upon the straw and hay and dry wood in the interior of the building it spread swiftly. Six alarms were turned in in rapid succession, bringing all the fire apparatus in the city to the scene. In addition to the snow storm the streets rapidly filled with people who refused to move and the firemen were hampered in their movements.

200 Wagons Consumed.

Two hundred wagons, many of them loaded with merchandise, were consumed. Officials of the company could only state the loss approximately, not knowing the value of much of the merchandise which was burned.

So intense was the heat that glass in windows across the street was broken. On the opposite side of the street stands a row of tenement houses. The families, aroused from their sleep rushed out into the snow in their night clothes.

Upon the top floor of the building were many valuable records of the company which had been kept there since its organization. There was also much specie in safes. The officials of the company believe that most of these escaped, as they were kept in fireproof boxes.

At 3 o'clock the walls fell in with a crash, sending up huge volumes of smoke.

The fire was discovered in the basement. It is believed to have been caused by crossed electric wires from which the insulation had been worn off.

The building, a four-story brick structure, occupied nearly the entire block from Henderson to Provost streets, and from Eighth street to Pavonia avenue. In the basement were stored vast quantities of hay, straw, oats, corn and bran.

On the street floor were the wagons. On the second floor were the horses. On the story above were the offices and on the top floor the record and counting rooms. One thousand men and girls were employed in the building.

With the arrival of the first engines it was seen the force was too small to cope with the situation. Then two more alarms were sent in. Still the fire gained.

The snow beat down the smoke till it swept through the streets in dense clouds making it almost impossible for the firemen to see. The glow from the flames was reflected back by the snow till it appeared as though a curtain of flames surrounded the building, which was then blazing like a furnace.

ISAAC WILLARD OF BROOKLINE DEAD

Isaac Willard is dead at his home at No. 12 University road, Brookline. Born in Orford, N. H., he went to New York early in life and engaged in the wholesale looking glass and picture frame business. During the Civil War he was commissioner for several northern concerns. Returning to New Hampshire twenty-five years ago, he entered the mercantile drug business, continuing in it until a few years ago, when he moved to Dorchester. Two years ago he moved to Brookline. He leaves a daughter, Miss Jennie J. Willard, and a son, Professor J. M. Willard, instructor at the Pennsylvania State College. He attended the Leyden Congregational Church, and was prominent in the Masonic fraternity. His funeral will take place to-morrow.

NAVAL HEROES ONLY PIRATES, SAYS TAFT

WASHINGTON, Dec. 4.—"Some of the great naval heroes of this country were nothing more than pirates." President Taft made this statement, astounding at first blush, in an address at the Thanksgiving services of the Junior Order of American Mechanics at the Wesley Methodist Church. But, President Taft added, it was the law of nations that made pirates in wartime—even so recently as the Spanish-American war—of sailormen and citizens most respectable and law-abiding in time of peace. "When international peace treaties are adopted there will be no more such piracy; the powers will not permit it," Mr. Taft declared.

RESUME VOTE BUYING PROBE

NEW BEDFORD, Dec. 4.—The Citizens' Committee that was responsible for the inquest into the vote buying that started two years ago, and a report of which has not yet been made, got together again today and arranged to again take up the fight.

One of the members of the committee denounced the New Bedford authorities as obstructionists, declaring that they had fought against an investigation from the start and had been responsible for bottling up the result of the inquest although it was closed, for all practical purposes a year ago.

The committee is composed of the Rev. Frank E. Ramsdell, pastor of the North Congregational Church; William B. Perry, William C. Parker and Frank M. Sparrow, lawyers. They have arranged to see David I. Walsh, who is investigating the alleged vote buying in behalf of the Governor.

CZAR'S TROOPS ENTER TEHERAN

TEHERAN, Persia, Dec. 4.—The advance guard of the Russian troops which was ordered to march on this city from Resht as a result of Persia's rejection of the Russian ultimatum demanding the expulsion of W. Morgan Shuster, the American treasurer-general, has entered the city and to-day a detachment patrolled the streets about the Russian legation.

The city was quiet to-day, although the entrance of the Russian soldiers caused some excitement. Mr. Shuster was warned not to expose himself for fear that his presence might lead to an outbreak.

A new crisis has been reached with the resignation of the cabinet. This action was caused by criticism directed at it for its first decision to depose Mr. Shuster from his official position.

A new cabinet and one favorable to the retention of the American in spite of the hostility of Russia will be formed at once.

LITTLE GIRL DROWNS SKATING ON THIN ICE

BRATTLEBORO, Vt., Dec. 4.—Ruth Idelle Birch, eleven-year-old daughter of John M. Birch of this city, was drowned while skating on an inlet of the Connecticut River. Her brother Albert, Joseph Lemere and Harold Oakes were rescued by older skaters, who did everything possible to reach the girl. The children ventured too far on the thin ice.

FRICKS LEAVE NORTH SHORE

After a season at Pride's Crossing Henry T. Frick, the steel magnate, with Mrs. Frick and Miss Helen, and twenty-five servants, left there in their special car last evening for New York, where they have rented for the season the Vanderbilt mansion. The family will spend a month or more in New York before going abroad.

An Unfailing Prescription for Kidneys and Bladder

The following simple prescription has proven one of the best remedies known for weak, deranged kidneys or bladder: Get six ounces good pure gin, add to it one-half ounce Murax Compound, one-half ounce fluid extract Buchu. Take one to two teaspoonfuls of this mixture after each meal and at bed time. It is surprising how quickly this stops backache, rheumatic pains in the joints, dizziness, pains in the groin or other frequent annoying symptoms that are well known. Almost any good druggist has the ingredients of this prescription. Anyone can mix. Treatment should be given at first sign of disorder to avoid the serious forms of kidney disease.

CHINA TO KEEP STUDENTS HERE

Z. Y. Chow, speaking for the twenty-two Chinese government students at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, said to-day that no credence should be placed in the report from Washington that the Chinese government students are in danger of losing their allowances. Even if the war is protracted, he declared, the students will be looked after, although there may be some delay in paying the allowances.

"We have absolutely nothing to fear," said Mr. Chow. "Whichever way the war goes we will receive our allowances. Even if the revolutionists win, we shall be taken care of just the same. In fact, all of us here favor the revolutionary cause.

"We have received no word from Yung Kwai, charge d'affaires at Washington, who has charge of us, and we do not expect any. We all know how things are going at home, as we receive frequent letters from our families.

"We know that the allowances of the Chinese students will not be cut one penny, no matter what is the result. If the war continues for a long time, there may be some delay in the payment of our allowances, but this will be nothing serious."

Chow comes from Shanghai. Practically all of the Chinese government students at Tech come from Manchu. There are thirty-four Chinese students at the institute, but twelve do not receive allowances from the government, their expenses being paid by their own families.

There are also several Chinese government students at Harvard University, the Worcester Polytechnic Institute and the University of Vermont, as well as in other schools throughout the country.

GERMANY LANDS TROOPS IN CHINA TO AID LEGATION

TIEN TSIN, Dec. 4.—A detachment of German marines were landed from a German warship here to-day to reinforce the troops now protecting the German legation and other German interests.

A detachment of British soldiers left the military depot at Hong Kong to-day for Shanghai. Their ultimate destination is said to be Pekin.

Scores of Manchus are being killed daily throughout Nanking by the victorious rebel soldiers who now hold the city. Some of the streets are filled with headless bodies. The heads are being cast into Yang Tse Kiang River.

General Ling's action in proclaiming himself viceroy has caused dissatisfaction in the revolutionaries, and he has been advised by his officers to renounce the title. Ling has offered $5,000 for the head of the Manchu viceroy who has fled to a Japanese gunboat where he is now safe. The rebels are preparing to advance up the river and attempt to recapture Hankow, Wu Chang and Han Yang from the imperialists.

MISS MARY COLT, THE "HERO" IN WELLESLEY PLAY

DEMAND RUSSIA HONOR TREATY

As a result of the work being done by the AMERICAN to compel the Russian government to honor passports of American citizens in Russia, decisive action os promised by Congress, and there is a strong possibility of the pact of 1832 between Russia and the United States being abrogated at this session.

Telegrams have been sent to all the Senators and Representatives asking this question:

"Do you favor action by Congress to force Russia to recognize passports of all American citizens, irrespective of race or creed, even though it means the abrogation of the treaty of peace of 1832 between Russia and the United States?"

Nearly one hundred replies have been received, only three being non-committal. All the Massachusetts members are in favor of decisive action. In the replies promptly sent some sharp utterances were made respecting the action of Russia in discriminating against Americans of Jewish extraction.

Congressmen For Action.

Here are the replies sent by some of the New England Congressmen:

Congressman John A. Thayer—"We should insist that the rights and privileges of all citizens of the United States should be equal and enforced everywhere, even though it entails drastic measures in our relations with Russia."

Congressman William F. Murray: "I favor action by Congress to compel Russia to honor all passports issued by the United States government, even though it leads to the abrogation of the Russian treaty."

Congressman William S. Greene: "Yes."

Congressman Robert O. Harris: "American passports should be recognized in every place on earth, and any discrimination against the holder should be strongly protested."

Congressman Andrew J. Peters: "The action of Russia in refusing to honor American passports is without precedent, and I firmly believe that decided action should be taken in the matter by this government."

Congressman James M. Curley—"I am in favor of abrogation of the treaty between the United States and Russia because of Russia's continued violation of that treaty."

Congressman John Q. Tilson, Connecticut—"I favor abrogation of the treaty with Russia unless she agrees to treat all American citizens alike in the matter of passports."

"The Quicker the Better."

Congressman Thomas L. Reilly, Connecticut—"Yes, and the quicker it is done the better."

Congressman C. A. Sulloway, New Hampshire—"Yes."

Congressman George F. O'Shaughnessy, Rhode Island—"I favor action by Congress in the Russian treaty question, even though it leads to abrogation of the treaty.

Congressman George H. Utter, Rhode Island—"I believe the United States should demand from all other nations such treatment of its citizens as it grants itself to citizens of those nations. As to the wisdom of giving notice to Russia of this country's intention to abrogate the treaty of 1832, in order to secure the desired end, I am unwilling to commit myself at this time."

The strong sentiment against the continued action of the Russian government in failing to recognize passports of American citizens of Jewish extraction is not confined to people of the Jewish faith. The question involved is the failure of the Russian government to honor passports presented it by citizens of a friendly nation. Congress is, therefore, looked to for a settlement of the matter.

Representative Jewish residents of New England have expressed themselves in no uncertain terms regarding the matter, and they feel that as citizens of the United States they have a right to expect the protection which the American government should afford.

The Boston Young Men's Hebrew Association, at a meeting in Jubilee Hall, passed resolutions condemning the action of the Russian government in refusing to recognize passports of Jewish citizens of the United States traveling in Russia, and urging members to petition their Senators and Congressmen to have the difficulty adjusted. Dr. N. A. Finkelstein presided.

A Physician's Report on Tuberculosis Medicine

"Have used Eckman's Alterative in several cases of tubercular glands of the neck, with excellent results every time. In one case it cost me $50, for the girl was put on it only until she could arrange to be operated on, and in a short time an operation was not needed. I suppose your records are just as fine as of old. You know my faith in it."

Eckman's Alterative is effective in other forms. Read what Mrs. Garvin says:

Idaho Falls, Idaho.

"Gentlemen: I have gained twenty-two pounds since last February, and my baby is in perfect health. She is now four months old. I have been waiting since she was born to see how I would get along. I am now doing all my work, have been ever since she was four weeks old, and I am steadily gaining. I do not cough or raise anything at all. I believe my lung trouble is cured."

(Signed Affidavit) MRS. M. H. GARVIN.

Note—Mrs. Garvin is the mother of seven children.

Eckman's Alterative is effective in Bronchitis, Asthma, Hay Fever, Throat and Lung Troubles, and in upbuilding the system. Does not contain poisons, opiates or habit-forming drugs. For sale by all Riker-Jaynes Stores, Houghton & Dutton Drug Dept., and other leading druggists. Ask for booklet of cured cases and write to Eckman Laboratory, Philadelphia, Pa., for additional evidence.

GIRLS IN PLAY AT WELLESLEY

Wellesley juniors will present the four-act drama "Rosemary" this afternoon in the college hall. The members of the freshmen class will be guests in accordance with the annual custom.

This forenoon the faculty witnessed the dress rehearsal.

The play was written by Louis N. Parker and Murray Carson. The cast is:

Sir Jasper Thorndyke, Miss Bernice Van Slyke; Professor Jogram, Miss Tilla MacCarten; Captain Cruckshank, Miss Mary Humphrey; William Westwood, Miss Mary Colt; George Minifie, Miss Nancy Brewster; Abraham, Miss Charlotte Henze; the Stilt Walker, Miss Frederica Savage; Mrs. Cruckshank, Miss Mary McDermott; Dorothy Cruckshank, Miss Evelyn Vanderveer, Mrs. Minifie, Miss Esther Balderston; Priscilla, Miss Louise Wood; Maid, Miss Beulah Hubbard.

Mrs. Maud G. Hicks of Boston is the coach. The committee on arrangements comprises: Miss Helen Brant, chairman; Miss Mary Coggeshall, Miss Marjorie Cowes, Miss Dorothy Harrison, Miss Elva McKee.

The scenes, laid in England in the time of King George, are as follows:

Act I.—The Cross Roads, Longburton, June 24, 1838.

Act II.—Ingle Hall (Sir Jasper's place), Longburton, the next morning.

Act III.—"Bull and Mouth," Straud, London, four days later.

Act IV.—Same place, fifty years later.

The theme of the play is the conquest by Sir Jasper of his love for Dorothy (who is promised to William Westwood) before it is full grown with the result that fifty years later he has only faint and pleasant memory rather than anguish from an old wound.

The first act finds Will and Dorothy, as they are eloping, overturned from the coach before Sir Jasper's house. He and his servant take them inside and keep them over night. The situation is complicated by the arrival of Captain and Mrs. Cruckshank, who are also housed by Sir Jasper.

Act II., four days later, finds them all there, and Jasper falling in love unconsciously with Dorothy and Dorothy unwittingly leading him on.

In Act III., the strongest scene in the play, Professor Jogram, good friend to Sir Jasper, brings him to his senses. The act ends with announcement of the wedding day for Will and Dorothy, and Dorothy gives Sir Jasper a sprig of rosemary for remembrance. He has not brought the parents and the eloping couple together until he has secured for them forgiveness.

Act IV., fifty years later, finds Sir Jasper again at the Bull and Mouth. He comes upon the faded sprig of rosemary by chance, and, true to Jogram's prophecy, he doesn't at first remember anything about it, and then at last he recalls it all in dim and happy memory.

At the rehearsal the play was given with snap. Winifred Vanderveer made a charming heroine with portraying a quaint, yet frivolous, young girl. Mary Colt, as hero, made a lover worthy of the heroine. Mary Humphrey, as the captain, caused peals of laughter. Bernice Van Slyke did good work depicting the character development of Sir Jasper.

ACTION ON TECH SITE TO BE TAKEN TO-NIGHT

Action by the Cambridge committee on highways on the question of closing Amherst street for the Massachusetts Institute of Technology is expected to-night. The report will probably go before the City Council on Wednesday night for final action. H. W. Beal, corporation counsel for Technology, said that, while the closing of the street would seem at first to entail a loss of the $4,900 spent for improvements, as a matter of fact to make the street passable would require a further expenditure of about $9,000, and this would all be for land which would not be used for some time, owing to restrictions.

MRS. PATTERSON IS AT PARENTS' HOME

SANDOVAL, Ill., Dec. 4.—Gertrude Gibson Patterson, acquitted in Denver last week of murdering her husband, Charles Patterson, has arrived here at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. John Gibson. Henceforth she will use her maiden name, Gertrude Gibson. "I feel the need of a good rest," she told newspaper men who met her at the railroad station. "I plan to remain with my parents for at least three months. Afterward I probably will visit relatives in Oregon."

EXHIBITION FLIGHT FATAL TO SCHRIVER

SAN JUAN, P. R., Dec. 4.—Tod Schriver, an American aviator, was killed in an exhibition flight which he was making at Ponce. Schriver fell from a height of 200 feet into a cane field, and died within half an hour while on the way to the hospital. Thousands of spectators witnessed the accident. Schriver ascended over Ponce in a Baldwin aeroplane and went through a number of evolutions. Apparently he lost control of the machine in making a turn.

NEW COMET SEEN BY KIEL OBSERVER

A comet, visible in a small telescope, has been discovered by Schaumasse at Kiel, according to a cablegram received from Professor Kobold at the Harvard College Observatory. The data shows that the comet was discovered on November 30, .6091, Greenwich mean time, about midnight on the night of November 30, local time, and was in right ascension 13 hours 12 minutes 12 seconds and declination plus 5 degrees 32 minutes. The daily motion was right ascension 3 minutes 32 seconds and declination plus 13 minutes.

SAVE OLD SHOES AT WELLESLEY

The frenzied financiers at Wellesley College have devised another scheme for making money. The new plan is much simpler than shining shoes, as it does not call for any real hard work on the part of the girls.

The Christian Association is the mother of the new money-making campaign. It has requested that old shoes, clothing and books no longer be thrown into the discard by the Wellesley girls. Hereafter all such articles will be collected by the extension committee of the association and sold to raise funds for carrying on its work.

ITALIANS PROTEST CRUELTY STORIES

WORCESTER, Dec. 4.—The Italian citizens and residents of Worcester held a mass meeting in Horticultural Hall to protest against stories of Italian cruelties in Tripoli, and organized a committee to raise a large fund in this country to be turned over to the Red Cross branch in Italy for work during the Italian-Turkish war now in progress.

CHARGES CHAUFFEUR WITH SLAYING WIFE

CHICAGO, Dec. 4.—Edmund Kaufman, a merchant whose wife was shot and killed by holdup men near his north side home, declares that William G. Guttenburg, his former chauffeur, arrested as a suspect, was the slayer. Guttenburg denies that he was one of the party of robbers.

MISS CARMEL EGAN WEDS POLO PLAYER

COPENHAGEN, Denmark, Dec. 4.—Miss Carmel Egan, daughter of Dr. Maurice F. Egan, United States minister here, was married to Gabriel Ambrose O'Reilly of the Philippines, formerly of the United States army and a well known polo player.

WILDE FORBADE FUNERAL POMP

The funeral, on Wednesday, of Rear Admiral George Francis Faxon Wilde, United States Navy, retired, who died at North Easton in his sixty-seventh year, will be without the usual naval honors, at the express wish of the deceased, who disliked pomp of any kind.

The old sea-fighter had been troubled with heart disease for several years, but the shock which caused the end came without warning to his physician or members of his household. Rear Admiral Wilde landed a body of United States marines—the first ever in China—during the Boxer uprising in 1898 and headed this body into Peking, where they maintained a guard over the American legation.

GUIDES PUBLIC ON FOREIGN MAIL RATE

In order to correct the impression that the two-cent rate applies to all foreign countries, Postmaster-General Hitchcock has issued orders to postmasters to post notices in regard to the postal regulations, hoping to avert postage blunders that have greatly annoyed the department. The two-cent an ounce rate applies only to the Canal zone, Guam, Hawaii, Philippine Islands, Porto Rico, Shanghai, China, Canada, Mexico, Newfoundland, republic of Panama, Great Britain and Ireland, and Germany when sent by mail direct. For all other countries, including Germany when sent by way of England or France, the postage is five cents for the first ounce and three cents for each additional ounce.

TRIANGLE FACTORY HEADS ON TRIAL

NEW YORK, Dec. 4.—The final chapter in the worst fire tragedy in recent years in this city—the Triangle Shirtwaist factory fire—began to-day in the General Sessions Court before Judge Cain, when Max Blanck and Isaac Harris, the proprietors of the company, were placed on trial, charged with first degree manslaughter in connection with the deaths of 146 persons, mostly young girls, who were employed in the factory. The greater part of the deaths were caused by the victims leaping from great heights to the ground.

Five Minutes Sometimes Makes A Big Difference

If You Are Suffering the Tortures of Indigestion and Have to Wait Until Someone Runs to the Drug Store for a Box of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets.

FREE TRIAL PACKAGE

The instant relief afforded poor overburdened stomachs by the use of a Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablet should be a reason for constantly keeping a box on hand—at home and at the office as well.

The Stomach Welcomes Quick Relief.

A Stuart's Tablet not only aids digestion but it actually does the digesting itself. In other words it furnishes exactly the same elements for the digestion of food as the natural juices of the stomach. The stomach, therefore, is not called upon to do any of the work except to churn the juices furnished by the tablet and then push the digested food along into the intestines where it will be still further digested and the strength taken up by the blood to be carried to the muscles and nerves of the body.

So by taking a Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablet after a meal you give the stomach the rest it needs in which to mend itself and grow well again. And you absolutely prevent the souring of any food, the formation of any poisonous gases, belching, foul breath or constipation.

Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets have done more for humanity and have caused more rejoicing than any other one agency that can be named.

Every druggist everywhere sells and personally recommends Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets. The price is 50 cents per box. If you first wish to try them a sample package will be sent you free if you write to F. A. Stuart Co., 150 Stuart Bldg., Marshall, Mich.

FOUR RESCUED BY GIRL OF 12

Twelve-year-old Hattie Murray, who rescued her four brothers and sisters, ranging from two to eleven years of age, from a fire that burned to the ground the home of the Murrays at No. 102 Pleasant street, East Weymouth, is to-day the heroine of the town.

The presence of mind and courage displayed by the little girl in effecting the rescue of the four children, it is said, will be brought by the officials of the town to the attention of the Carnegie Hero Fund Commission.

To-day before she went to school she said:

"Mama and papa went to church shortly before seven o'clock last night. They left me in charge of the house with Elsie, Charles, Ethel and Lena. We were playing in the front room. I smelled smoke. I ran to the kitchen. As I opened the kitchen door the smoke poured out. I knew at once there was a fire.

"I tried to get out through the back door and found that the fire was burning all around it. I ran to the front of the house. When I reached it I remembered that father had nailed up the front door, as he always does in the Winter time, our only entrance in the Winter being through the back door.

"I went back to the front door where the children were. They were all huddled in a corner. They were all crying. The room was filled with dense smoke. I did not know what to do.

"Then I brought them into the bedroom and opened the window. Lena, who is very nervous, was hysterical with fright. She had fainting spells. Then I opened the window and cried for help, but nobody heard me.

"I grabbed hold of Charles and Elsie and put them out of the window. I had a hard job because the window is five feet to the ground. I just managed to catch hold of the sill of the window and pull myself back again into the room with the assistance of Lena.

"I next grabbed Ethel and Lena and put them through the window, and Lena pulled in the fire alarm."

The furniture of the Murray family was destroyed.

WIFE SEEKING PETER CRUIT

In the little village of North Woolwich, Kent, England, Mrs. Peter Cruit is heart broken over the disappearance of her husband, who left the little village eighteen months ago to come to this country.

In March 1910, there was not a happier home in the village. Cruit heard of the advantages of this country and left the little cottage, telling his wife and children that he would send for them as soon as he secured a position here.

Days passed by and no word was received, weeks rolled on, and still Cruit sent home no glad tidings.

Cruit is a solicitor and cook and is thought to be located somewhere in Massachusetts or New Hampshire.

He is thirty-eight years of age, fresh complexion and partially bald. He is about 5 feet 9 inches in height.

GIRLS CALL MEETING TO CONSIDER STRIKE

Dissatisfaction among the girl weavers employed at the Roxbury Carpet Company mills to-day resulted in the issuance of a call for a special meeting of the young women at No. 1,165 Tremont street, Roxbury, at 7:30 o'clock Wednesday evening. The call was issued by Mrs. Sarah A. Conboy, international organizer of the United Textile Workers and president of the Roxbury Textile Workers' Union. She said that a strike vote would be taken by the girls. If favored by a majority, she said, the strike would be declared the following morning. The trouble at the mills is said to date back to the strike won by the girl trade unionists almost two years ago. Union operatives, Mrs. Conboy said, have been laid off or put on short time with the intent of breaking up the organization.

Somebody's Folly

What folly it is to select our wheat—
Then wash and brush and scour it—
Then grind it 20 times—
Then sift it 10 times through silk.
What folly it is if, by all these precautions, we don't get a flour that is better than others.
But, if we do get it, what folly it is for housewives not to insist on this Gold Medal Flour.
Which of us makes the mistake?

Gold Medal Flour has come to outsell every other flour in existence.

Just because we take those precautions.

And because millions of housewives, after countless comparisons, have discovered the merit of Gold Medal Flour.

Now they use in their baking just this cream of the flour — just these sifted-out granules—just

Review of School Season On Football Gridirons

The 1911 school gridiron season is now history. The season closed Saturday with three post season games, and now the football warriors will have a long rest of nearly a year. This season has been the most successful in spite of the fact that no team went through the season undefeated. Many teams of high calibre were developed, but all received upsets.

All of the schools with the exception of Melrose in the Suburban League has fast teams, and the championship was not decided until Thanksgiving Day. The three schools in the Triangular League were also strong, and all had chances to win.

The season started on September 16, Waltham inaugurating the football year by defeating New Bedford High School 17 to 0. Milton played the second game of the season with Woburn the following Friday, and on Saturday five games were played. That was the real start of the campaign, and each week following a long list of games were played.

At the start of the season no fine football was played, and all indications pointed towards a poor football season. Everett High, Cambridge Latin, Boston Latin and Medford looked to be the only teams that would cut any ice, but the second and third teams named fell far below all expectations. The early games played were loose, but that was excusable, for it takes times to develop a football team.

Medford Hits Stride.

It was not long, however, before many of the schoolboy teams hit good strides and some fast games were being played. Medford High, the winners of the Suburban League, was the first team to show championship form, and its early games gave all indications towards a most successful season.

Its first game was against the strong Boston College High team, which resulted in a 0 to 0 game, but on the following Saturday the team hit its stride which it held throughout the season. The team was defeated but once, and that by Somerville High.

Somerville High had a poor looking squad at the start of the season, but under the able coaching of Steve Mahoney a strong team was developed. But one defeat was suffered during the season, and that unexpectedly by Malden High. The Red and Blue team was a dangerous factor in the Suburban League, and up to its last league game had a chance to win the championship.

It was the backfield that carried Somerville through the season with such a good record. Leyland, Garland and Deane proved to be the best backfield in the schoolboy circles, and they were enabled to hit every line for good gains. The Red and Blue line was rather weak, but at critical moments the players held like a stone wall and could defend their goal line.

Everett Line Strong.

Everett High with its strong, heavy squad at the beginning of the season, although they played a good game and won the greater part of its game, were rather disappointing in important games.

From the size and strength of the men the team should have cleaned up the Suburban League title without much trouble, but they proved incapable. The light Medford team with a lot of speed defeated Everett, and a weaker Somerville team held Everett to a scoreless tie that put it out of the running for the championship.

The team finished the season with but one defeat, scored 251 points against their opponents' fourteen. Those fourteen points were scored by Medford. All the rest of the teams played were kept out of the danger zone. The Everett line was strong and the backfield men carried the ball for good gains. William Gould proved to be a find at bucking the line, and his good work put the ball over many times.

Everett played old-time football. Not much open play was tried. With a strong line and a good backfield it was found out early in the season that rushing the ball was the most reliable, and that style of game stuck to the finish.

Although Malden High started with a squad of green men, they were always dangerous, and the team made a better record than was predicted. The team developed slowly, but at the time of the game with Somerville the team was going at a high rate of speed, and defeated the Red and Blue combination by a good score. They could not continue the strong game, however, and they were defeated by Everett and Medford.

Newton is Champion.

Newton regained the championship of the Triangular League over Brookline High and Cambridge Latin. All three schools had strong teams, and it was not till after the hardest kind of games that the Orange and Black team could rightfully claim the championship.

Coach Allie Dickenson had many veterans to start the season with, and he developed the boys into a good machine. But 100 points were scored during the season against twenty-one against them. The team defeated Dedham, Winthrop, Hyde Park, Needham, Brookline, Worcester and Cambridge Latin, were defeated by Waltham High and played tie games with Brookline, High School of Commerce and Somerville High.

Waltham High piled up a better record than was expected. The team scored 272 points against their opponents' 28. Thirteen games were played and but two defeats were registered against them.

The two big Cambridge schools, Latin and Rindge, were far below their usual standards this season, although towards the end of the season both teams played a hard game and were dangerous opponents. Cambridge Latin was defeated five times by Somerville, Waltham, St. Mark's, St. John's Prep, and Newton, while in turn victories were registered over Quincy, Arlington, Rindge Technical, Tufts' freshmen and a tie game was played with Brookline.

Rindge played but a short schedule of games, seven battles being fought. Four of those games were defeats and three tie games were played.

The schools in the city were far below their usual standard. Boston Latin and English High slip honors, each defeating Mechanic Arts and in their annual battle fought to a 0 to 0 score. The High School of Commerce team played some good games, as did Mechanics Arts.

Natick High Fast.

Many great teams were developed outside of Greater Boston. Natick High it may be said was the speediest team in the State, and several of its players ranked up with the best men that the heavier teams of Greater Boston produced.

Natick played a schedule of sixteen games, scored 524 points against its opponents' nineteen, and were defeated but once, and then by the heavier Waltham High aggregation. Coach Pray developed a team of stars with speed as their strong points, and it is thought that this eleven could have defeated most of the teams in Greater Boston.

Lowell High, Haverhill High, Middlesex School, Arlington, Beverly, Salem and many other schools had strong teams, and good games were played throughout the State.

The school boys will now turn to track and hockey. Several of the out-of-town schools will have basketball teams, but this is a dead sport among the schoolboys. The track candidates at several of the Boston schools have already been called out, but it will not be till next week before real work will start.

Hockey has become a strong game among the school boys, and with a league including some of the strongest teams, this game should take a good boost this season. Many games will be played at the Boston Arena, but the real season will not start till the cold weather and ice comes.

Basketball Notes

The Bunker Hill Five are after games with the fastest teams in the State. Have open dates which they would like to fill as soon as possible. The team is composed of former high school stars. Manager John O'Connor, High street, Charlestown.

The Progress Five of Somerville would like to arrange games with the fastest 130-pound teams in the State for any night in the week. Away from home games preferred. Manager John Ross, No. 7 Stickney street, Somerville.

Owing to a cancellation the Crowell Five of the South End is without a game for December 9 and would like to hear from some strong team offering a reasonable guarantee. Manager Al Young, No. 7 Ringgold street, City.

The Chelsea Intermediates still have a few open dates during December and January away from home. Games are desired with teams averaging 105-110 pounds. Manager Walter Swartz, No. 436 Broadway, Everett.

The Ford Memorial Branch, Y. M. C. A., Midgets challenge fast teams averaging 80 pounds. Have a record of winning twenty straight games last season. Saturday afternoons open at home. Manager George Richmond, No. 1178 Tremont street, Roxbury.

The Manhattan Social Club of Somerville are making arrangements to organize a fast five. Already Tom Bannister, George Yonker and Tommy Anderson have joined. As there is plenty of good material in the club the other two positions should not be hard to fill.

The Marshall A. C. of Winthrop would like to arrange games with teams averaging 90 and 100 pounds. Open dates every Wednesday evening at home after December 13. Half expenses for seven men. Manager Henry L. Torny, No. 146 Lincoln street, Winthrop.

The Somerville Boys Club has organized a strong quintet for the coming season and would like to hear from some of the fastest 95-100-pound teams in the State. Jim Dowd has taken up the managerial reins and is out to arrange games with fast organizations. Manager Jim Dowd, Somerville Boys' Club, Somerville.

The Wood A. C. of the South End, which has not been beaten for two seasons, have organized for the coming season and would like to hear from the strongest 115-pound teams in the State. All veterans will make up the lineup with the addition of Costello of the High School of Commerce, one of the strongest forwards in the State. Manager Joseph J. Lowney, No. 114 Boylston street, Medford.

The Fenno Five are after the fastest teams in the State, having still a few open dates on its schedule. The team will open its season to-night against the Oliver Ames A. A. of North Easton. These two teams are great rivals and a lively contest is expected. Next Thursday they play the St. Mary's of Franklin. Last season the Fenno team was the only team to beat the Franklin boys and the latter are out for revenge. Manager Frank W. Johnson, Mattapan.

Company A, Fifth Regiment of the M. V. M., will be represented on the floor the coming season with a fast 135-pound team. The team will be composed of Burton and Callahan, who will take care of the forward positions; Mason, the former Charlestown High player, will cover centre, while Willard, Purdon and Emmons will be the back candidates. Would like to arrange games at home for Thursday night and away from home Saturday nights. Manager Chester L. Burton, State Armory,

STRONG QUINTET AT WINCHESTER

Winchester High School hopes to be represented by a fast basketball team this year, and under the able teaching of Coach Watson have already shown marked improvement. The team is lucky in having four of last year's quintet back at school and also four of the second team, which went through the season with but two defeats. Owing to parental reasons, R. Thompson, who was elected captain of this year's team at the close of last season, has resigned, and Prime has been chosen to lead the team, and from his position at centre should build up a fast team around him.

Emery and Flinn, regular backs on the team last year, will again be at their old positions unless some of the new men now out for the team crowd them out. Some of the likely candidates are Mobbs, Dover, Rogers, Farnsworth and Johnston, from the second team, and Goddu, Leslie, Warren, Hilton, Geddy, Webber, Randlett, Furbush, Thompson, Strawbridge and Decelle.

Manager Lloyd Clark has arranged a long schedule of seventeen games, thirteen of which will be played on the home court. The first game will be played on Saturday night, December 9, against the Mitchell School of Billerica in the Winchester High School gymnasium.

MOTION PICTURES OF ARMY-NAVY GAME

Boston will have its first chance to see motion pictures of a football game when the film of the Army-Navy game will be shown at the National Theatre this afternoon. The pictures will be shown throughout the week. Many motion picture films have been made of baseball players in action, but football films have been a failure up to this season, when a remarkable film was made of the recent contest between Uncle Sam's future generals and admirals.

AMERICAN A. C. WILL RE-OPEN THURSDAY

The American Athletic Club will resume its boxing meetings once more on Thursday night of this week with one of the best local cards ever arranged by any club in the city. The headliners are George Alger and A. J. Duffy, the two leading "comers" of the lightweight class around this section. The balance of the program is made up as follows: Teddy Murphy vs. Chicken Roskin, Young Jasper vs. Young Clancy, Eddy Nadeau vs. Mickey Brown, and Spider Murphy vs. Young Benny Yanger.

CHAMPION WOLGAST IS IMPROVING RAPIDLY

LOS ANGELES, Dec. 4.—"Say, when do I get a good, square meal?" Ad Wolgast asked from his hospital cot. "I could eat a horse, but all I get is this doctor's cooked food and very little of that. How do I feel? I feel fine and if there was a suit of clothes handy about I'd leave here in a hurry." Wolgast's condition, according to the nurse in charge, was good.

GIANTS BEAT CUBANS.

HAVANA, Dec. 4.—The New York Nationals defeated the Havana baseball team, 5 to 2.

MORAN, DRISCOLL IN PRIVATE GO

The very latest from London is that Owen Moran and Jem Driscoll are to fight to a finish for the featherweight championship of England in private.

This pair of pippins was to have met at Birmingham on December 2, but the authorities put their feet down and stopped the quarrel. Both boxers are now under bonds to keep the peace and have abandoned the Birmingham idea entirely.

Mr. Gerard Austin now plans to hold the affair in private and has the consent of both Moran and Driscoll. His scheme is to get 200 sportsmen over there to put up $100 apiece, making up a purse of $20,000 and guarantees that the bout would not be interfered with.

Moran will stay on the other side of the water until December 20, and if nothing turns up will come over to the States and box for Jimmy Johnson, who has a few dates in sight for him.

Owen wants to box Mat Wells in London and is willing to sign up at 125 pounds if Matthew will but consent. Just at present Wells is reaping a golden harvest from the music halls.

MANDOT WINS IN BOUT WITH HAYES

NEW ORLEANS, Dec. 4.—Joe Mandot of New Orleans got the decision over Grover Hayes of Philadelphia before the West Side Athletic Club after twenty rounds of the hardest fighting seen in New Orleans since the old prize fight days. A crowd of 5,000 saw the bout, and were pleased with the verdict of Referee Harry Stout.

Mandot was badly battered, while Hayes's face was considerably cut up.

Mandot fights Billy Allen, the Canadian champion, at Memphis on December 18, after which he will rest for a month.

With the Boxers

Frankie Burns has been matched to meet Johnny Coulon at New Orleans on December 24. Burns is now under the management of Jimmy DeForest. It is almost needless to say that DeForest is claiming the bantamweight championship for his protege. As a result the battle will be billed for the bantamweight championship of the world.

Jim Barry, who is soon to sail for Australia, is now in the "in bad" class out on the coast. Barry was billed to show his prowess at 'Frisco the other night, but at the last minute he did a "hold-up" stunt.

Pal Moore and Jack Dorman clash at Harlem to-night. Moore should win if he shows as well as he did in this city against Battling Nelson. Moore is a wonderful lightweight, but not a championship possibility. He goes along well for eight or ten rounds, but after this he tires.

My, what a noise these lightweights are making claiming championship titles these days. Every boxer in the country who weighs between 130 and 138 pounds is out with a statement telling of what he intends to do to the other fellows. When Wolgast re-enters the ring he will likely defeat the bunch with ease.

Mike Gibbons, the St. Paul welterweight, is getting plenty of free advertising these days. According to New York experts he is the greatest middleweight that has come over the pike since the days of Joe Walcott. Gibbons will undergo a severe test when he meets Walter Coffey at the Fairmont A. C. Tuesday night. Coffey weighs about 156 pounds, while Gibbons tips the beam at 145, but claims that he can make as low as 142 if necessary.

BOUTS TO-NIGHT.

GIANT PITCHERS LEAD LEAGUE

The official pitching and fielding averages of the National League were announced today and they show good work by many players. "Rube" Marquard of the New York team leads the pitchers with a grand average of .774, winning twenty-four games, while he was defeated but seven times.

Crandall, also of the New York team, was second man with fifteen victories out of twenty games, and "King" Cole of the Cubs proved to be the third best twirler of the season. None of the Boston pitchers finished among the leaders. Pfeffer ranked highest among the Rustlers with seven games won and five lost.

McDonald, third baseman on the Boston team, made the best showing in fielding and finished second among the third basemen. Zimmerman of Brooklyn was the only player to lead the Boston recruit. Konetchy of St. Louis led all first basemen with a grand average of .991.

Houser was the leading first baseman of the Boston men but he only participated in twenty games. Bridwell and Spratt ranked far down the list of shortstops and Sweeney was far down the list as a fielding second baseman.

BUSY WEEK FOR LEAGUE BOWLERS

The bowling leagues will get back into full swing this week after the Thanksgiving holidays. The rollers are satisfied after their short rest and promise to set up some high scores the coming week. Matches will be in swift order from now until the Christmas layoff.

The fight for first position in the Knights of Columbus League will be continued to-night with the Allston-Waltham match as the feature. These two teams, together with Maplewood, are tied for first position and to-night's matches will have a lot to do with the standing.

While Allston and Waltham are trying out conclusions, Maplewood, the third contender for top place will battle against the Dedham Council. Although the latter team is second last in the league they made it hard going for Allston last week and are bound to make things interesting for the Maplewood five to-night.

Another match that is attracting lots of attention in this league will bring together the two Mt. Benedict Fives. Four points for Team B would put them in a tie position with Team A. Santa Maria will meet Valladolid, Everett meets Ansonia, Jamaica Plain will try the mettle of Roxbury while Brighton and Ozanam will battle for last position.

Notes of the Alleys

Eddie Wise, who has taken up the management of the Eliot Alleys, has started off by offering a novel tournament. The contest opened Saturday and will close Saturday, December 23. The man having the highest three consecutive strings, only one ball to be rolled in each frame, and strikes to count as ten, will be awarded the first prize of $25. The other prizes will be, second $15, third $10. The contest is open to all.

Some big scores are due for next Friday night in the Heptasoph League. Joe Robinson of the Dudley aggregation is sure he will take all four points from South Boston, while McClean of the Russell Five is out to clean up the Ashmont conclave, which are now leading the league. A large crowd is expected to be present.

Ryan dropped first position as high individual roller in the Boston & Maine League in last week's matches. Brennan now leads with a mark of 99. Ryan is but two points behind and is confident that he will regain top position in to-night's matches.

The fight for first position in the Suburban-Interclub League is getting to be rather interesting. Oxford and Cottage Park are now tied for first position with Winser close behind. South Boston and Colonial are tied for fourth position, but three points behind the leaders.

MURPHY WANTS OPEN MEETING

CHICAGO, Dec. 4.—Charles W. Murphy, president of the Chicago National League Baseball Club, is preparing to stir up a lively time at the league meeting in New York, beginning [illegible].

Reports reached Chicago that a change would be proposed [illegible] voting for a fine of $250 or a punishment for any magnate who in the future might give out for publication anything in connection with an executive meeting.

Concerning the report, Mr. Murphy gave indication that he would vigorously oppose such a move. He said: "I am first, last and all the time heartily in favor of the open-door policy and decidedly opposed to any move tending toward gumshoe methods and secret gatherings.

"Let the meeting be in the form of a convention, with invitations to old-timers, newcomers, press and the like, so that all may have an opportunity of making suggestions.

"It seems to me that dark-lantern methods are no longer necessary in the conduct of professional baseball. If all the cards are to be dealt above the table no one should be ashamed of his actions at the meeting of the National League.

"The game belongs to the people. Then let the people know what is going on at the meetings. I say let the members of the Baseball Writers' Association of America into the rooms, and let them participate in the debates."

The plan is for the National Commission to take the matter up and propose a remedy, after which the major league magnates will have an opportunity to offer suggestions.

MORAN MATCHED TO RACE ELMER COLLINS

Elmer Collins, the Lynn cyclist, and holder of the American championship, and "Jimmy" Moran, have been matched to meet in a five-mile motor-paced race at Madison Square Garden next Saturday night. Collins not only holds the American championships, but he has defeated all of the best men in Europe. Collins won the title from Bobby Walthour. In the past two years Moran has become a noted pace follower, winning many races on foreign tracks. Last year the pair met and the race was won by Collins by inches.

HUGH JENNINGS SLIGHTLY BETTER

SCRANTON, Pa., Dec. [illegible].—The condition of Manager Hugh Jennings of the Detroit American League baseball team, who, with Father Lynett, was injured in an automobile accident late Friday night, is today said to be slightly improved. Father Lynett's condition is not so favorable as it was twenty-four hours ago. Jennings's injuries consist of a badly bruised left foot, contused left thigh, fracture of both bones of the lower thigh of the left forearm, cuts and bruises about face and head and concussion of the brain.

EARLY CHRISTMAS SHOPPING URGED

Boston storekeepers will tell you that this promises to be the happiest Cristmas that this section of the country has enjoyed in many, many years. Why? Because people are doing their Christmas shopping earlier than they ever did before.

There are so many advantages to be obtained by the customer in doing Christmas buying a few weeks before the holidays that it is strange that anybody would put it off until the day before Christmas. In an interview with a reporter for the Sunday AMERICAN, a salesgirl in one of the big stores said that last year the few days before Christmas she was so tired that a night's rest had little effect on her.

George S. Smith, president of the Chamber of Commerce, in an interview with a reporter of the Sunday AMERICAN, urges the public to do their Christmas buying at once. Here are some of the advantages that accrue from early buying, as pointed out by President Smith and by salesgirls who were interviewed:

Customer Is Benefited.

The customer gets a better assortment of goods.

The customer has more time and gets better attention.

The customer avoids the rush and bustle of the day-before-Christmas buyer.

The girls who work in the stores and other employes are saved hardships of the most trying character.

"The Chamber of Commerce, through the Retail Trade Board," said President Smith, "is again urging the public of New England to shop early for Christmas. It is a consideration and kindness which the purchaser owes the employes of all branches of trade which have an extra heavy business during the holiday season.

"The movement in itself is peculiar in that every one is benefitted. First of all, the workers, from the counter to the delivery wagon, have a happier holiday season. The stores themselves receive benefit because the congestion of the last days is relieved.

"The purchaser gets a better selection of goods and more courteous and prompt attention. That the public has not long ago eliminated the congestion at Christmas time is because it has not been informed of the actual suffering and hardship imposed upon the people who must answer its bidding in the stores at this season of the year.

Make It a Season of Joy.

"The magnificent efforts of the press for early Christmas shopping in years past are now being strengthened by the efforts of such organisations as the Consumers' League, the Civic League, the labor unions and the Chamber of Commerce. Why not make this a season of joy for all concerned, rather than a season to which the salespeople will look forward with thoughts of resentment and hardship. It is our earnest desire that all will participate in this movement."

Miss May Lowell, a saleswoman in one of the department stores, tells her experience with customers who leave their Christmas shopping till the last moment.

"Every saleswoman knows that goods cannot always be delivered when they are demanded three days before Christmas," said Miss Lowell. "Why, the drivers work night and day to deliver the goods in time, but even then some delay may be caused, and often customers loose their patience and say unkind things about the saleswoman, not thinking that if they did their shopping just two weeks before Christmas the best service would have been rendered.

Push and Jostle All the Time.

"I often think that it would pay to borrow the money if you do not have it handy, rather than to wait for the last day to get what you want in the way of presents.

"I know that some people have not the ready money to purchase presents. But if they have got to buy them, it is better for them to borrow the money than to limit all their shopping into one day before Christmas. It is rush, push, and jostle along through crowds, and every one is tired and cross with the effort.

"Whereas, if you take two or three days in the third week before Christmas and go about this Christmas shopping in some systematic way, taking your time, and seeing so much to choose from in the different stores that are not crowded, you will enjoy your shopping better.

"But then, people should have some consideration for the saleswoman. She wants to serve the customer in the best way possible, but she cannot do this when her counter is surrounded with a number of customers who want to be waited on all at once.

"It is utterly impossible to serve any customer during the Christmas rush in the best manner. So I think that people would gain so much more in every way if they would get all their shopping done one week before Christmas.

"Many are doing this now. The stores are fuller of people than is usual for this time of the year, and I have heard many say that more Christmas shopping is earlier this year. It is a great saving of strength to the customer as well as to the saleswoman."

A Salesgirl's View.

Ten years behind the counter convinces Miss Sadie Fitzpatrick that customers lose much in not shopping early for Christmas presents. The service of the saleswoman is more valuable before the rush comes, which sets in a week before Christmas.

"If people would shop early they would get so many advantages," said Miss Fitzpatrick. "First of all, they can get a better assortment of goods. The goods have been bought long ago for the trade and this year the assortment is far in advance of former years.

"The customer can have closer attention from the saleswoman. Just one week before Christmas every one is so tired.

"I remember last year that I was so dead tired the last few days before Christmas that I would go home and lie down, but I did not feel rested, and just two days before Christmas every one seemed to come into the store and wanted to be waited upon at once. You could not make any suggestions to them.

Hard to Buy in a Crush.

"People were pushing in front of my counter. It was so hard to get the change and every one was in a hurry.

"All this might have been avoided if those same persons had only come two weeks before Christmas. When you sell Christmas presents you want some time in showing them and you want to talk with your customer, so that he or she will be perfectly satisfied with what they have purchased. But when they rush into a store the day before Christmas and say to you, 'show me something pretty in your line for Christmas,' you can't give them any time or consideration, and often they are not pleased with what they have bought and come back after Christmas to return it, simply because they have bought in a hurry.

"If customers would only think, they would never let their Christmas shopping go till the last few days."

Another Saleswoman's Ideas.

Miss Mary E. Sheerin, who is one of the most popular young saleswomen in a store on Washington street, is very enthusiastic over the agitation on early Chirstmas shopping.

"I think that the people are taking hold of it and responding well," said Miss Sheerin. "We have already sold more goods on our counter this year that are especially Christmas goods than last year.

"Most of the young women in this store have done their Christmas shopping. We've set the customers a good example in this respect, and I think that there are very few in this store, so far as the girls are concerned, that have not done their shopping for Christmas.

"Now, we are telling all our friends to do the same, and I think that in a week you will find that many have all their gifts at least a week before hand."

YOUNG DREXEL ILL IN LONDON

LONDON, Dec. 4.—J. Armstrong Drexel underwent an operation for appendicitis in London last week, but is now progressing favorably. He is the son of Anthony Drexel, who remained in London receiving daily reports of his progress. He leaves for America shortly. Young Drexel was taken ill Thursday and operated upon the same evening at a private hospital in Henrietta street. He had booked passage on the Olympic and but for the fact that she was delayed by fog he would have been aboard before the nature of his illness was discovered.

NORTH END LEADS IN POSTAL SAVINGS

The North End, home of probably a larger percentage of foreigners than any other part of the city, has shown the greatest confidence in Uncle Sam's postal savings system, and since October 9, 256 accounts have been opened at the Hanover street station. From August 1 to November 30, 5,059 postal savings accounts were opened at the Boston Postoffice and six subsidiary stations at Back Bay, East Boston, Essex street, Hanover street, North postal, Roxbury crossing, South station and Station A.

PLAYGROUNDS FOR ADULTS, LABOR PLEA

The Boston Central Labor Union has unanimously indorsed the movement in favor of more public playgrounds for adults as well as children. It also favors the appointment of women physicians to have charge of medical inspection of girls attending the public schools. On the general question the delegates recorded themselves in favor, in the interests of the conservation of public health, of the proper medical inspection and care of the health of school children.

WATER CENSUS GIVES WORCESTER 156,362

WORCESTER, Dec. 4.—Worcester now has a population of 156,362, of which number 155,162 are known and accounted for users of city water, according to a census just completed by Water Registrar George C. Hunt. These figures show an increase in population of 5,624 inhabitants over last year's water census. The 1910 Federal census placed the city's population at 145,986.

JOSEPH WARREN LODGE TO HAVE BIG BALL

There promises to be some merry doings at Intercolonial Hall on January 10, when the Joseph Warren Lodge holds its annual ball. The committee on arrangements is working overtime in order to make the ball a big success. It is sure to be attended by a large number of sporting men.

100 POWERLESS TO SAVE GIRL SKATER

FITCHBURG, Dec. 4.—While more than a hundred fellow skaters watched her struggles, unable to lend assistance, Hildur Carlson, eighteen, drowned in Green's pond. She broke through the ice in the centre of the pond.

KING'S CHAPLAIN DEAD.

LONDON, Dec. 4.—The Rev. Thomas Teignmouth Shorn, cannon of Worcester since 1891 and chaplain-in-ordinary to the King, is dead. He was born in Dublin in 1841. He was honorary chaplain to Queen Victoria in 1878.

FOR SICK HEADACHE, SOUR STOMACH, LAZY LIVER OR SLUGGISH BOWELS.

Turn the rascals out—the headache, the biliousness, the indigestion, the sick, sour stomach and foul gases—turn them out tonight and keep them out with Cascarets.

Millions of men and women take a Cascaret now and then and never know the misery caused by a lazy liver, clogged bowels or an upset stomach.

Don't put in another day of distress. Let Cascarets cleanse and regulate your stomach; remove the sour, undigested and fermenting food and that misery-making gas; take the excess bile from your liver and carry off the decomposed waste matter and poison from the intestines and bowels. Then you will feel great.

A Cascaret to-night will straighten you out by morning—a 10-cent box means a clear head and cheerfulness for months. Don't forget the children—their insides need a good, gentle cleansing, too.

SAVIOUR LEADS ROLL OF FAME

Chancellor Emeritus E. Benjamin Andrews, of the University of Nebraska, formerly president of Brown University at Providence, and author of "The History of the United States in Our Own Times," and other works, explains his choice of the twenty greatest men in history in the following manner:

"JESUS CHRIST—His position at the head of humanity is unchallengeable whatever view you take of His person, whether you think of Him as a religious founder in particular or simply as a man and thinker.

"BUDDAH—Next greatest, who, without ever striking a blow or letting one be struck on his behalf or on behalf of his faith, receives the homage of more human beings than adhere to any other religion.

"PLATO and ARISTOTLE still retain their places as greatest among those who know.

"ALEXANDER—Recent studies, particularly one by Benjamin Ide Wheeler, president of the University of California, on the life of Alexander the Great, make it clear that his grasp of things in his time and his benevolent purposes with reference to the development of mankind render him entitled to his sobriquet of the Great.

"CAESAR—Touching Caesar's pre-eminence, there cannot hardly be two opinions, though there is still difference of opinion as to his deserts.

"CHARLEMAGNE—Deserves his cognomen as the Great, for he did more than any other ruler, more than any dozen rulers, to import order to medieval society.

"CROMWELL and NAPOLEON are names so familiar that I need not pause upon them.

"WASHINGTON—The greatness of Washington is more and more recognized with passing years, not only by Americans, but by the intelligent of all nations.

"LINCOLN—The same even is more true of Lincoln. The only question that could arise touching these two men (Washington and Lincoln) would be their relative greatness. It is possible posterity will place Lincoln in the lead."

"COLUMBUS—His eminence needs no discussion.

"BACON, NEWTON SHAKESPEARE—Likewise take their places in the list, with few, if any, to challenge.

"LUTHER—I exalt as a great seer who saw the things of his time in a wonderful manner and had the will to take a stand in favor of the developments that all thoughtful people then saw to be necessary.

"BISMARCK—His work in the unification of Germany makes him immortal.

"WAGNER—For my justification in placing Wagner in the list I refer with pleasure to the estimate of him presented by Carl Schurz in his memoirs published a few years ago.

"VICTOR HUGO—I hesitate a moment in the next place between Goethe and Hugo, but upon reflection I am satisfied that Hugo's immortal novels make him fitter to stand beside Shakespeare than Goethe.

"DARWIN—As to his fitness for a place in the list I expect practically universal agreement. Whether the doctrine of development as taught by him is accepted in the wide scope he meant to give it, or only in a more limited way, he will remain as a master contributor to the science of life.

"In submitting this list I should like to add that I consider any such selection of twenty names as inevitably more or less arbitrary and I freely admit that my own choice is, at points, probably not personally objective, but warped by my reading and education or lack of education."

DECLARES MORE WOMEN SMOKE

NEW HAVEN, Ct., Dec. 4.—According to a statement made here by Dr. Jay W. Seaver, for many years director and now assistant director of the Yale gymnasium, the percentage of tobacco users among the honor men at Yale is small, while among those who do not receive honor grade the percentage is ten times as high.

Dr. Seaver has started the organization here in this city of a branch of the Non-Smokers Protective League of America on the ground that smoking is growing to an alarming extent among young men and women. In speaking of the increase of smoking among women and Yale students Dr. Seaver said:

"We find that smoking is becoming more and more of a habit with the women. Go down to New York any time and visit the Waldorf-Astoria, and you will find women smoking outright. In Martin's either day or night you will find women puffing away at cigarettes. Of course they are more or less of the demimonde type and not our representative women, I hope; still in their private circles and in their homes women who are certainly respectable otherwise smoke.

"New Haven has its proportionate amount of smoking among women. Girls are taking up the habit. In fact I know of a girls' society in the High School where the members get together for nothing else, apparently, than to smoke. Then I know of a young women's literary society the purpose of which, it would seem, was to study literature, but the young women of which at their meetings turn their attention largely to tobacco.

"I understand that smoking is on the increase in Yale University. I can give no reason for the increase except that it is because when prep. school men and others come here as freshmen they see the men in the upper classes smoking. They may never have smoked before, but when they see the others smoking they feel that to be a good fellow they must smoke too, so they acquire the habit."

COLD STORAGE FOOD TAGGING FAVORED

The Legislative Recess Committee on Cold Storage, which is closing up its report on the conduct of cold storage warehouses, has worked out in part at least some sweeping changes for the handling of that business in the State. Its present program calls for legislation. For the tagging of food products in and out of cold storage warehouses. For the special stamping in a way to be plainly understood of such products when on sale. For a complete system of inspection not only of the warehouses, but the food contained in them by health authorities. The one point yet in dispute in the committee is as to the length of time the warehouse people will be allowed to keep fodstuffs in cold storage.

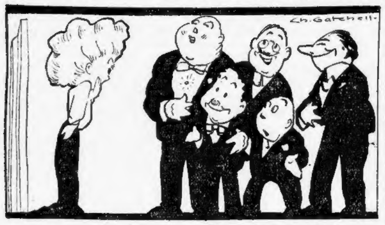
The Manicure Lady

She Discusses Matrimony With Her Friend, the Head Barber.

"I HAVE had a awful lot of neuralgia lately, George," said The Manicure Lady. Honest to goodness, I feel as if I ought to be at home right now. It's awful to have a headache and then have to listen to a lot of them sweet nothings that the customers say. Yesterday when my head felt the worst, a guy from up State comes in and tells me that my hair is like a halo. And the minute I got his nails did in comes a gent from the Middle West somewhere in Illinois, and tells me that my eyes remind him of two blue lakes.



"Lots of Young Men Who'd Make Phony Husbands."

Well, George, I guess there is only one answer. I guess I'll have to blow the game and get married."

"I hope you don't make no false step," warned the Head Barber. "There is a lot of young men on the market these days that would be awful long shots for husbands."

"Leave it to me, George," said the Manicure Lady. "I ain't no Wellesley graduate, but I have just that much native brightness that no Joe can come along and put no ring on my next to the little left finger. The female of the species is more foxy than the male. Leave it to me, George.

"Brother Wilfred was saying last night, when the subject of matrimony and alimony came up, that he would get married himself if he could find some fine widow with a bankroll, so he could live somewhere out on a country estate and write a few plays. He is working on a blank verse play right now, one of them tragedies that sounds like Mister Shakespeare. Poor Wilfred took the scenario to all the big producers, and after he had walked right in he walked right out again. He said they all told him the play sounded too literary.

"You'd think, wouldn't you, George, that literary plays would have a great call these days, but somehow it don't seem that way. This blank verse play of Wilfred's is about a married couple. That's what made me think of it when you and me was talking about matrimony. It seems there is a man that poses for a German baron and comes over to Newport and marries a pretty young girl named Inez. Brother has some of the grandest lines in that play that you have ever saw. Listen to this verse, the part that I learned by heart.

"THE BARON:

Inez, I love thee. More no man can say.
I love the gold that illumines your dear
hair;
I love the eyes that, like two sylvan pools,
Lie darkling in the glade.

"INEZ:

Thanks, my dear baron, for them words
you said—
Us girls, I think, all like appreciation.
And something in the way you said them words—
Or maybe in them words themselves—who knows?—
Has made me feel as happy as a child.
But, baron, I am poor—
EXIT BARON.'"

"That's a wonderful brother, that Wilfred of yours," said the Head Barber. "But getting back to your neuralgia and your plans for matrimony, I don't think it would be a bad idea at all for you to get married. The only thing that surprises me is that a girl of your beauty should have stayed single so long. If I were a bachelor, kiddo, and you were working in the same shop with me, I wouldn't be one long."

"That's awful sweet of you, George," said the Manicure Lady, "but you are a blonde, and I want to marry a dark man with a fair income."

Overheard

IF any man ever admired his wife, that man was Howler. And when the Fitzboodles asked Mrs. Howler to get up and sing "There Is a Garden In My Face," the husband glowed with pride.

No matter that she had a face like a hippopotamus and a voice like an elephant, he sat beaming as she sang, and could not refrain from bending over to his neighbor and whispering: "Don't you think my wife's got a fine voice?"

"What?" said his neighbor, who was a little deaf.

"Don't you think my wife has got a fine voice?" repeated Howler.

"What?"

"Don't you think my wife has got a fine voice?" roared Howler.

"Sorry!" returned the neighbor, shaking his head. "Can't hear a word you say. That awful woman over there is making such a frightful row singing."

Preparing

HE was a cheerful Governor, and on good terms with every member of his staff. But he was just. If you had a reasonable excuse, well and good; if not—then it was useless trying to bluff him with any old story.

Wherefore, he took an opportunity of warning his office-boy shortly after the football season had begun:

"Well, John Willie, I don't see how you're going to get to any of the football matches this season. Remember, both your grandmothers died twice during the last football season!"

"Yes, sir," agreed the hopeful one. "But—didn't I tell you, sir?—grandfather's gone and got married again, very much against the wishes of the family, sir."

HICTANER—By Jean de la Hire

The Man That Lived in the Water—One of the Strangest Stories Ever Written

TO-DAY'S INSTALMENT

Copyright, 1911, by American-Journal-Examiner.

THE four men went to the summit of the cliff. They entered the grotto once more and soon came out, each bearing a heavy basket on his head.

Martiali pressed the little cube of stone which controlled the rocks with his foot, and the great blocks drew together once more. Martiali covered it with gravel, and fifteen minutes after the four companions were aboard the Bakouvine.

"The soldiers sleep well," said Vampa.

They all began to laugh. They did not know that the troop of engineers had abandoned Cape Creus.

"Before going out to sea, I should like to salute Admiral Germinet's torpedoes with a shot from the electric-mirror. Martiali, double the cape. Vampa, put on first speed!"

Martiali held the steering wheel. Vampa controlled the motor.

They obeyed.

The Bakouvine had quickly doubled the point of the cape and Severac, standing forward, was already aiming his electric mirror.

But no torpedo's dark bulk loomed against the calm sea in the silvery moonlight. No lights twinkled.

Are they gone?" asked Tchouvine.

Not a ship lay in the waters of Cape Creus.

"It is a pity," sneered Severac. "I should have taken great pleasure in cutting a torpedo boat or so in two with my electric mirror. It would have reminded me of the time I cut the bars at Fort Saint Jean. Cape to the south, Martiali. To Cabera Isle. It is thirty-six minutes east longitude and thirty-nine degrees ten minutes north latitude. Fourth speed, Vampa."

The Bakouvine sped along in the same direction Hictaner and Admiral Germinet's fleet had taken.

Passion was speeding the two dangerous enemies to the same point of the vast globe.

They were not destined to find what they sought, but were to meet face to face? Fate, who had decided it, alone could tell.

THE ELECTRIC MIRROR.

FOR an hour, not a word was spoken aboard the Bakouvine. Tchouvine and Gaerilo were asleep on the deck, and Vampa watched the motor.

Martiali manipulated the rudder wheel and Severac was seated forward, with his elbows on his knees and his chin in his hands, dreaming of Moisette, and letting his eyes wander over the immensity of the dark sea.

Great clouds blowing from the East were rolling across the sky, hiding the moon almost continuously. The breeze began to grow stiffer, and the sea, after a week's calm, billowed with spray crested waves, white splashes in the darkness.

Severac's eye was suddenly attracted to a distant light which disappeared rhythmically in the trough of the sea. At first there were two, then four, and they were evidently the lights of a vessel.

"Take care, Martiali," said Severac in a low tone as he turned to the stern.

Vampa woke Tchouvine and Gaerilo with a nudge.

The two men rose, and they fixed their eyes upon the lights—tiny trembling stars, which became more and more distinct.

"They are lanterns of two torpedoes," said Severac. "Bear to the right, Martiali—let them pass to port. Whatever torpedoes they are, I mistrust them. If they are Admiral Germinet's, it is best not to notice their passing.

"I have been thinking about it. It would have been stupid to electrocute them, if I had found them at Cape Creus."

"Where can they be going?" murmured Gaerilo. "They are headed for the Balearics, you see."

The Bakouvine glided along the surface of the water at full speed, without any light to betray its presence. Soon it was opposite one torpedo, which it passed, and then the other.

"Severac," whispered Martiali, "do you see a submarine navigating the surface to starboard at the rear?"

"Yes, and another forward, to port."

"Dive, Martiali," ordered Severac. "I don't care for any unsolicited comment on our presence. We will dive."

Thereupon Tchouvine, Gaerilo and Severac disappeared by a hatchway. At the same time Vampa touched a button. The movable cover of the Bakouvine rose from each side, met and was hermetically closed, and without slackening its speed, the launch dived obliquely until within ten yards of the bottom.

After twenty minutes beneath the water's surface its prow bounded violently up out of the sea, and she sank down in a fountain of spray to go on her way, with uncovered deck and open hatches.

Only Conjectures.

A little while later Tchouvine and Gaerilo appeared on deck and there was animated discussion as to the strange coincidence of the flotilla going in the same direction as the Bakouvine.

Why should Admiral Germinet be going toward the Balearics? Severac then had the unhappy thought that the destruction of the grottoes and the abduction of Moisette and Vera was Hictaner's work, which would explain Admiral Germinet's destination.

Doubtless something had made him suspect, or definitely learn that Hictaner was carrying Moisette away to the mysterious little house at Cabrera, and therefore he was going there to sign the treaty of peace with the happy Hictaner.

These were only conjectures, but they were sufficiently plausible to transport Severac with jealous rage.

"Faster, Vampa! Faster!" he cried.

Even when the machinist replied that they were going at full speed he felt that the Bakouvine was very slow, so consumed was he with impatience.

Dawn came, and then the day itself. The sun hid behind a heavy curtain of clouds reaching from the east to the zenith. The wind blew like a hurricane, and the Bakouvine bounded through the growing waves—now swept from stem to stern, and now hanging from the top of a wave with her keel almost wholly out of water.

Tchouvine and Gaerilo had gone into the cabin. Vampa had closed the hatchway leading to the machinery, and Martiali, at the wheel, had enveloped himself almost hermetically in a pilot's cloak.

Severac alone did not see the threatening storm, did not feel the shock of the waves which were inundating them, nor the lash of the spray.

He was clinging to a ring on deck, devouring with his eyes the gray bulk of Majorca in the distance, indistinct and cloudy.

"In half an hour," he said, "we shall be at Cabrera, and there I shall know the truth, though I die for it."

He counted the minutes.

• • • • • •

Hictaner had arrived three hours before Severac distinguished the cliffs of Majorca in the mists.

He did not penetrate the submarine harbor, where he had lived so many years.

Knocked at Door.

With the knowledge of the little white house on the island so lately gained from Moisette, he left his Torpedo at the bottom, went ashore and straight to the door of the house, where he knocked.

A peep hole was opened and a pair of suspicious eyes shone behind the grating.

"Open," said Hictaner.

"Who are you?"

"I have been sent by the master of the Lost Isle."

The door opened and Hictaner found himself in the presence of a heathen priest, who, when he beheld the strange man whose face alone he had seen through the hole, drew back.

"You do not know who I am?" asked Hictaner.

"No, I do not know," stammered the priest.

"I am Hictaner. Have you heard of me?"

"Hictaner? The one whom the master created? Yes, we often spoke of you in former days, but we have never met you."

The priest felt re-assured now, delighted at beholding the marvellous being with his own eyes.

"You come most opportunely," he went on.

"Opportunely? How?"

"Because I got a message about you from the master not a minute ago."

"A message? What did it say?"

"The master asks that you leave for the Lost Isle the moment it reaches you."

"Then Moisette is not here?" exclaimed Hictaner with beating heart.

"Moisette? No," replied the brother, in accordance with Antil's instructions.

It Was the Truth

It was the truth, however.

"She has not been here?" insisted Hictaner, tremblingly.

"No," he answered, "she has not been here."

"You lie," exclaimed Hictaner, haunted by a persistent presentiment.

"You can visit the house," replied the monk, placidly. "You may open all the doors."

Hictaner followed the man, well knowing that Moisette was not then at Cabrera, but believing that if she had been he would be able to discover some traces of her passing.

In only one room did he see anything suggestive of Moisette's rooms at the Lost Isle. But, from the appearance of the dusty hangings, of the cold odor which pervaded it, from the chairs piled in a corner and covered over, he was convinced that the room had not been inhabited for long months.

Then the priest astutely remarked:

"But if the master summons you to the Lost Isle, it must be undoubtedly because he can tell you where Moisette is."

The idea struck Hictaner favorably.

"Perhaps," he said to himself, "Oxus and Fulbert really do know. They know so many things. The chain of submarine telephones, their spies stationed everywhere, would not let them remain long ignorant of anything Moisette is not here.

"They must know where she is.

"Did the plank mean nothing, after all? Or was Vera herself deceived?

"Perhaps as Severac's accomplice she was trying to put those who searched for Moisette off the scent. But my heart will not believe that Moisette is buried in the demolished grottoes. I will go to the Lost Isle."

Without thinking of Admiral Germinet, but only of his native passion, Hictaner left the house at a run, plunging into the sea, found the Torpedo, and sped toward the Persian Gulf at the frightful speed of 100 miles an hour, ten yards from the bottom. The Suez Canal was obstructed, so he sped toward Gibraltar to circle the vast African continent.

The Retort

IT all happened in the camp of the First Muddleshire Yeomanry.

'Twas a hot afternoon, and the stoutest private in the company was reposing blissfully outside the tent. And it so chanced that the latest recruit came strolling along, and with considerable force stepped upon the foot of the stout sleeper.

In a moment the weighty dreamer was wide awake.

"Tut, tut!" he said, as privates do. "Er—ah!" and other similar expressions of anger broke from his lips. "D'you know what you've done, blockhead? You've gone and trod on my foot!"

"I'm so sorry," said the recruit softly and humbly. "But, really, I did my best to jump over it, and you know I'm only human, and not a blooming kangaroo!"

The Fable of the Wise Dame

By DOROTHY DIX

ONCE upon a time there were two Young Maids who Grew Tired of sitting upon the Anxious Bench waiting for Eligible Men to come along and Notice them, so they determined to get up and go out and Rustle some on their Own Account.

Now, both of these Maids were most Charming and fitted to Adorn any Society. Also they were there with the Glad Raiment, and a Nifty Line of Conversation calculated to make a Man swell up with Gratified Vanity until he became so Chesty his Shirt Studs would not hold.

Furthermore, these Maids had had the Inestimable Advantage of being brought up by Mother, who was on to the Game of Life, so they passed up the Girl Bachelor and Latch Key Proposition as a False Alarm, and did not Afflict the Public by running any Bluff about the Glorious Privilege of Supporting Herself being a Cinch for a Female

They were never weary of touting the elder sister.

"On the contrary," they said to one another, "a Good Home and a Ready Money Bill Payer is worth Two Careers any day of the week, and we opine that any Lady will find it less Fat going to Work a Husband than it is to work a Typewriter."

Unfortunately, however, the Elder of the Sisters had not been Present when the Distribution of Beauty was being made, and hence she was a Trifle Shy on Pulchritude, but when it came to Real Intellect she was Sally-the-Whole-Works.

The Ugly Duckling

"Alas," she said, as she communed with herself, "my Mirror tells me that I am the Human Chromo instead of a Living Picture, and I am wise that I will never win out on my Looks, but what is Beauty compared to Brains and a Noble Disposition?

"It is true that in a Beauty Show I would not cut as much Ice as my Sister, who certainly is a Peacherino in Appearance, but who has a Mind of the Consistency of Scrambled Eggs, and a Temper like a set of Fourth of July Fire Works.

"I do not wish to Hurl any Boquets at Myself, but I have made a Close Study of Men, and I apprehend that my Superior Knowledge of the subject will leave my Sister at the Post, for while she possesses Beauty, I have a Great Head.

"I have listened carefully while Men discoursed about what Women Should Do, and I have ascertained that while they Seem to Admire the Women who look like a Daily Hint From Paris, what they really Yearn For is a Female Creature who takes Serious Views of Life, and who has no Vanity and Affectation.

"I have listened with profit to the many Knocks that Men hand women for their Devotion to Dress. I have also observed how they Deplore the Fact that a Creature with a Soul should spend so much valuable Time in Trying to make herself Attractive to Men instead of Engaging in some Useful Pursuit.

An Attractive Centre.

"So it is up to me for the Natural Waist Line, and the Puffless Coiffure, and to give a Moving Picture Illustration of all the Qualities Men Admire Most in Women," and with that the Elder Sister Cut out the Fashions, adopted Rational Dress, and Devoted herself to Performing Household Stunts.

The younger Sister, on the other hand, continued to help out Nature with the Rouge Pot, and the Peroxided Frankfurter, and although there was nothing on her Mind but her Hair she was the Centre of Attraction wherever she went.

If she had Searched her System she could not have found a Single Idea in it, but she had a Habit of getting There all the same.

She noticed that it is the Maid with the High Heeled Slippers and the Marcelled Locks and the Frou-Frou Skirt who is fed on Lobster and Chocolate Creams, and she opined that that was about all that she needed to know in her Business so she spent her time in Frivolous Amusement, and in keeping her Hand in a nice Squeezable Condition.

Now, all of the old Married People were never weary of Touting the [illegible]er Sister as the Capital Prize in the Matrimonial Lottery.

"See," they cried, "here is a Maid who realizes at last the Ideal of a Perfect Woman. She is Industrious, Economical, Sensible and Domestic, and as a Wife she would be the Real Thing."

"What you say is True," each Man thus addressed would reply. She is, indeed, a Noble Creature, and she would be Just the Wife some other Man should Marry, but not for me.

"She comes up to my Ideal, but she does not Fire my Fancy, and I apprehend that if I were married to a Wife who had no Faults it would get on my nerves until I should arise some night and Bat her in the head, for I could not stand to contemplate such Perfection. Besides, a Husband's chief Amusement after Marriage is Knocking his Wife's Weaknesses, and if she had none he would be deprived of a Pleasant Daily Diversion."

Whereupon the Men all hied away and popped the Question to the Younger Sister, who had no Matrimonial qualifications whatever except her Personal Appearance.

Moral: This Fable teaches that the Women who are fitted to be Good Wives always remain Old Maids.

SOON AS I BRING HIM TO THE ROOF THIS FEROCIOUS BLOODHOUND WILL TEAR THE VILLAIN TO PIECES
SOOVALK
HORRORS! FOUL PLAY MY LOVER CLAUDE IS FOILED AND THE CUR DESMOND ESCAPES US
OUCH! TAKE THAT SKYLIGHT FRAME OFF MY HEAD THIS BLOODHOUND HAS SPOILED ALL TRYING TO CATCH THAT MOTH THIS IS TERRIBLE
THE SKYLIGHT IS BROKEN AND CLAUDE HAS LET GO OF THAT ROPE. NOW TO FOIL THE ANGERED DOG
I'LL TIP MY PLUG HAT OVER MY NOSE WHILE I ESCAPE THROUGH THIS MOTH BALL ROOM. THE DOG IS OVERCOME NOW TO CUT AWAY THESE ROPES AND TO ESCAPE
WUR-R WOOF
I WILL FIGHT CLAUDE, THE ARMY AND THE WHOLE CITY OF TRIPOLI
SURRENDER DESMOND, THE ODDS ARE AGAINST YOU
HE MUST DIE
G HERSHFIELD

D. Desmond, the villain known in every country of the civilized world, is now in again. Claude has the scoundrel roped, and he has no idea of letting him escape the penalty of his misdeeds. Even should Desmond get away, the excited populace would undoubtedly administer justice without waiting for the law's slower procedure.

With a "yo, heave ho!" Claude begins to pull the scoundrel up through the skylight. Sailors always "yo, heave ho," especially in the chorus of comic operas. So far as a layman can judge, the "yo, heave ho' is used to give the idea that "yo, heave ho!" brigade are working hard. Some poet should write on "The Man With the Yo, Heave Ho!"

A dog, foolishly allowed by the Turkish government to roam the streets of Tripoli, makes a hungry dive for a moth, which has alighted on the skylight, and the animal smashes through the glass, knocking over Claude just as he was about to have Desmond securely trussed up on the roof. Poor Rosamond again sees her lover baffled.

As the rope is released, the villain takes it on the run. It is a cardinal principle with Desmond to go while the going is good, and he puts the plan into execution right away. The ferocious dog, balked of its prey, is after the villain, and it looks as if Desmond will be gnawed considerably before he gets away.

But Desmond is a downy bird. He utilizes his famous hat as a protector against the fumes of the moth balls, which the rug merchant has scattered around to protect his merchandise. The dog, not having on its hat, has no such recourse, and turns up its little toes as the camphor quickly suffocates it in that close room.

"I'm the boy!" cries Desperate Desmond, "and I'm the big smoke in this chimney." The villain is now at bay. Claude and the soldiers have determined to capture the villain at all costs, and the career of the international crook must soon come to an end. There is every prospect of a thrilling battle, and the only way to get full details is by looking at to-morrow's pictures.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

COMBINE YOUR ENERGIES AND INCOMES

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am thirty and engaged to a man of twenty-eight. The young man in question is making $80 a month, while I earn $100 a month. We desire to marry, and he feels that we can live comfortably on the $80, and that there is no necessity for my keeping my position. I am not so anxious to work after I become married, but then how much better we could live on the $180 combined, and save, than we could on the $80. Will you give me your honest opinion of what you would do if you had to decide such an important step?

A CONSTANT READER OF YOUR ADVICE.

I WOULD continue the work you speak of, by all means. Daily occupation of this kind will greatly add to your conjugal happiness, besides insuring your independence, which is most important. In any case make the experiment. I know it is bound to succeed, and other married couples may follow your example. Peace and content follow after a long day's conscientious exertion. The quarrelsome discontent of many families would be greatly modified if each individual strove to accomplish some purpose or work.

INSIST ON THIS AT ONCE

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

If a young man kept company with a young lady for over a year and they quarreled and separated, would it be proper for him to say he wanted his letters returned and at the same time to send her letters back?

PERPLEXED.

YES, it is quite proper to send her letters back and also to ask for your own. Such matters should always be terminated in this way, properly and finally.

"WHEN POVERTY ENTERS THE DOOR"

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am a young man of twenty-one. I am deeply in love with a girl whom I know to be a flirt. She has promised to be my wife. I am earning $12 a week. Is that enough to support a family on?

IT depends entirely how you live. If you are both willing to be economical, you could just about manage on $12 a week.

However, I would advise that you wait. If the girl is a flirt you had better be sure of her BEFORE you marry her. A year would give you time to raise your salary and to test your love.

LET YOUR HEAD ADVISE

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I have been going to see a young lady who lives some forty miles from my home for the past year. She has told me that she does not know what love is, and that she never loved any one. She also has treated me coldly when I call. Do you think I am wasting my time? I like the girl, and have heard that she thinks a great deal of me.

R. J. A.

YOU certainly are not wasting your time. This is the kind of girl for whom to wait. Try to be more diplomatic. Make your visits a little less frequent for a while, and when she thinks you less ardent she will be only too anxious to get you back.

Of course, she does not know her own mind, but she will soon. Don't worry. Be willing to wait. Use your head and you will succeed.

"Ow," the man mocked her, "Princess 'igh and mighty, ain't it! Mustn't touch 'er little 'and in case it goes an' brikes!"

The hoarse voice ended in a curse, for a strong hand seized the brute by the collar and drew him back whimpering like a dog.

"You cut your hook, miss," a voice said in her ear, "and wait on the there pavement for Seaman Oates."

Clemency was conscious of a raised arm, before which the surging sea of humanity that surrounded her seemed to cleave.

There was a chemist's shop in the street, a dismal little shop, huddled in a corner. Blindly Clemency made for the light and the shelter it promised, and as she burst into the shop, almost before the peculiarly brazen tinkle of the bell with which the door was furnished had died away, the crowd of yelling men and youths and frowsy girls had swept by.

It was a woman who came out leisurely from the shop parlor at the summons of the bell.

A Harsh Smile

She looked at Clemency with an air rather of displeased abstraction than of curiosity, while the girl explained her predicament, and offered no word of sympathy, though she fetched her a glass of water.

"What was it? I wonder what the commotion could have been about?" Clemency said faintly as she sipped the water. "I thought at first it was a riot—a hunger riot"——

The woman's lips parted with a harsh smile.

"No, 'twas nought but the mad Elias, as they call him, I'm thinking," she said, with a strong Scottish accent. "A puir mad fool that preaches perneecious doctrines."

She brought down her hand on the battered counter in an angry gesture.

"There shud be a law agen haverers such as you," she said. "Ay, an' would be, but for the blind despotism o' an Erastian establishment that has its heel on all the releegious intelligence o' the country."

Her tirade was cut short, to Clemency's relief, by the entrance of the man who had called himself Seaman Oates. He was followed by Tring.

"You are all right, Clemency? Good Lord, for the moment I did not know what had happened to you!"

Clemency laughed at the adventure, though a moment since she had been on the verge of tears.

"It was a horrible moment," she said gayly, "and yet one does not altogether resent it. It seems almost something of a symbol—an augury for the future—being swept out and away with the surge of the crowd. . . ."

"An Unpleasant Symbol"

"An uncommonly unpleasant symbol. Your mysticism is a little beyond me, I confess, Clemency," Tring said. He was annoyed, and found it hard to conceal his annoyance. He had been badly knocked about, he had lost his hat and his watch and had suffered a moment's torture when he saw the girl swept away from him. "A piece of symbolism that might have merged into the very definitely unpleasant, but for Mr. Oates here," he repeated.

The man's hand went up to his forehead and he smiled in an expansive way.

"Toots, it was naethin," Oates said. "Ony man gifted by the Lord wi' strength could have done the same."

"And what was it ye did, Samuel?" demanded the woman behind the counter.

"Jest gi'ed that son o' Belial, Bob Bowd, a scrag i' the neck, sister," the man said over his shoulder.

"I am very grateful to you," Clemency said, conscious of a desire to laugh that was half hysterical. She put out her slim hand, and the man took it in a great paw, where it lay like a white flower on the brown palm. "I do not in the least know what I should have done without your help. Are the people of this neighborhood always so—so emotional?"

"Wal, miss, anythin' strange sets them off," he said.

His appearance was as remarkable as his speech; his calling was writ large upon him. Here in this frowsy little shop he seemed to emanate a breath of the sea. He was tall and burly, with a brown face gnarled and pitted as though carved from some wood of coarse ungenerous grain that had been left to the winds and the rains of innumerable days to color and polish. "An' this puir mad fule as calls himself Elias—his richt name bein' plain John Smith—he's new to them, ye ken. So, till they gits used to him like, they baits him.

"He is a harmless fule till he gets to preachin'," he said.

The woman behind the counter gave a harsh assent.

"Blind fools leadin' the blind," she said.

"Well, I hope your Southern neighbors don't treat this unfortunate as roughly as they treated us," Tring said.

He laughed, feeling in his waistcoat pocket with finger and thumb for a coin.

"Nay, nay, thankin' ye kindly all the same," the man said decidedly. "It was naethin' but my duty I did. An' now, if you'll be 'scusin' me, I shud be off afther the puir daftie, I'm thinkin'. Ye see he's a lodger o' ours, an' I'm in a manner o' speakin' responsible for him."

"I'd like to see this man," Clemency whispered to Tring. "Poor, mad man, we might help him."

Clemency Sees Life

"No, not even for you, my dear," he said. "You must really curtail your enthusiasm for to-night. I've got a cab waiting—Oates hailed it for me as we came along, and I'd like to get back to civilization."

He turned to the woman and smilingly laid the sovereign Oates had refused on the counter.

"That is for the conversion of your mad lodger, madam," he said. "Your brother told me something of him as we came along."

Tring hurried Clemency out to the waiting cab and Oates shut the door on them. Once again Clemency put out her hand to him.

"I shall not forget you, Mr. Oates," she said.

She gave a swift glance at the shop, where already the thin, sour-faced woman was bringing out the shutters; in the dimness above the shop she made out the legend:

H. BANNISTER, Chemist Box.

"The House of the Open Door will deal with H. Bannister," she said to Tring as she leaned back in the corner of the cab with a little sigh of satisfaction.

Clemency did not so much as notice his silence. The slow old four-wheeler, in whose interior seemed to hang the condensed odors of all the musty stables where it had found a temporary resting place, was passing now through streets the like of which she had never seen.

A scene glowing with life, life painted in crude colors, splashed from some master palette.

It was only when her eyes fell on the faces of the little knots of loafers who stared with insolent, aggressive faces at the unwonted spectacle of a cab in the narrow market thoroughfares that she felt a sense of almost terrified repulsion sweep over her.

As the cab lurched, suddenly brought to a pause at a street corner to let a heavily laden railway van pass, Tring felt the girl clutch his arm suddenly.

"Look—I believe that is the 'Mad Elias,'" she said.

Tring's eyes following the direction of her pointing finger had a momentary glimpse of a scene Rembrandtesque in its detail.

Uttered Wild Cry

"Mad—mad as they make 'em, evidently. I hope friend Oates—why, Clemency!"

He gave an exclamation of dismayed surprise, for the girl at his side had uttered a wild, hysterical cry and was clinging to him in a passion of tears.

"Clemency, my dear girl, what on earth has happened?"

His arm was around her; she lay sobbing on his shoulder as the cab rumbled on now into broader, less brilliantly illuminated thoroughfares.

"Nothing . . . nothing! Only the world is so strange, so horrible—and I am frightened—frightened!"

She became calmer presently and drew away from him, ashamed of her tears.

If the terror out of the past was to come linking hands with the terror of the present she must go mad, she told herself. And it was the terror of the past, the obsession of Africa, of those delirious dreams of her illness, that had leaped up and caught her by the throat at the mere sight of a fanatic preacher at a street corner; illuminated as he was by the red glow of a charcoal brazier.

She felt a sudden need of the protection of the man beside her stir within her.

She turned abruptly to Tring.

No Need for Delay.

"I—do you still—seeing what an hysterical fool of a woman I am—want to marry me?" she asked in a strangled voice.

"Yes." He answered her bluntly, deliberately refusing to dispute the form of her question.

She gave a quick, short laugh that cut at the heart of the listening man.

"Then please marry me quickly," she said. "As soon as it is possible. I—after all, there is not any real reason why we need delay, is there? And the contract will give us both an extraordinary freedom."

"That is as you wish and when you wish, Clemency," Tring said.

"I wish it now—soon, whenever it is possible! No, no! Don't touch me. I shall scream . . . I shall go mad. . . ."

They were back in the heart of the West again; the East lay behind like an ugly memory; the driver, who was old and bleary, had mistaken the obvious direct route through the Strand, that would have led them past their respective destinations, the great hotel dominating the river, standing back almost unpretentiously from the Strand, and the old ancient street running down to the river where Tring lived, and had taken them by some devious route into the very heart and centre of restaurant and theatre land.

She was calm now, if stillness and silence were indicative of calm; without moving his head he could see the pure white severity of her profile outlined against the dark background of the cab. To avoid seeing it he stared out at the gay crowds that the restaurants were disgorging, for a theatres were long since dark and deserted, the limelight turned off, the puppets restored to their boxes, the mummers scattered abroad.

Men and women, women and men—he saw the thing he did not wish to see on every side—the lovers, the husbands and wives.

What a fool he had been to impose this bondage on himself—what a fool!

He thought of what another man and woman in their position on the eve of what they contemplated would have been feeling, would have been thinking. Thoughts of their future home—their life together; the children who might be born to them to make the perfection of that home. And this woman at his side, this woman he loved, was thinking, not of him, not of his home, but of the home of miserable women she had never seen—the drab sisterhood of London's superfluous women.

Back at the Hotel.

And in his dumb fury his thoughts sought for a scapegoat and found it—in the person of the woman who had lectured that night.

The cab was rumbling into the court yard of the Majestic.

Tring, with a generous tip and an exorbitant fare, could afford to chafe even the vinegar-faced old Jarvey, and when he turned, Clemency was gone, with a fugitive good-night called, scarcely audible, over her shoulder.

Tring followed the rumbling cab out of the well-lit courtyard.

She had not even waited to hear his proposed plans regarding the forthcoming marriage.

Do You Know That—

Newspapers from Canton, Ohio, report a romantic wedding of a poor Norwegian cook to a local millionaire, Mr. Edward Langenbach. The cook, whose name is Rosa Jansen, won her husband through her skill in the culinary art. Mr. Langenbach engaged Miss Jansen as cook and was so delighted with the first meal she prepared that he proposed to her on the spot. The new cook was considerably astonished, but accepted him with equal promptitude. The millionaire lost no time, but immediately took out a marriage license, and the ceremony was performed an hour after the satisfactory meal had been placed on his table.

A suicide club has been discovered by the police in Kursk. The club had for its motto, "Death is the cure for all ills," but, as set forth in a little book of rules, candidates for membership had first of all to show that they had a substantial cause for wishing to die. A would-be candidate who presented himself with the weight of ten or more years of unhappy married life was received with open arms. Loss of fortune, incurable disease, and a record of ill luck all around were also excellent qualifications for membership.

There are, according to German official statistics, 7,000 persons in Europe who have attained their hundredth year. Bulgaria comes first on the list with 3,883 centenarians, then Roumania with 1,074. PATERSON, N. J., WOMAN MAKES STARTLING STATEMENT

Says Resinol Is Worth Its Weight in Gold

No telling what this woman has used Resinol for. Whatever it is, it has proven most efficacious to call forth such an unequivocal statement as this:

"Resinol Ointment is marvelous. It acts almost instantly, and is worth its weight in gold.
"MRS. C. E. GILMAN, Paterson, N. J."

Resinol is a reliable remedy for every skin irritation, trouble or disease, whether it be the accidental scald or burn, the common cut or sore, or something more serious, like a felon, the carbuncle, inflamed piles, eczema, frostbites, boils, chilblains, pimples, chaps or eruption from poison ivy or any other irritating trouble or disease of the skin. Its quick application will remove much suffering. Resinol Soap is recognized as the great standard health soap of the world. It is medicinal and antiseptic, soothing and refreshing. It cannot irritate the skin not even that of the infant, prevents the falling out of hair, is indispensable for shampooing. Its continuous use wards off most of the skin troubles. The ointment and soap are for sale by all druggists, or if free trial is desired, write for sample to Department 96, Resinol Chemical Co., Baltimore, Md.

THE SKYLIGHT IS BROKEN AND CLAUDE HAS LET GO OF THAT ROPE NOW TO FOIL THE ANGERED DOG'
I'LL TIP MY PLUG HAT OVER MY NOSE WHILE I ESCAPE THROUGH THIS MOTH BALL ROOM. THE DOG IS OVERCOME NOW TO CUT AWAY THESE ROPES AND TO ESCAPE
WUR-R WOOF
I WILL FIGHT CLAUDE THE ARMY AND THE WHOLE CITY OF TRIPOLI
SURRENDER DESMOND, THE ODDS ARE AGAINST YOU
HE MUST DIE
C HERSHFIELD

D. Desmond, the villain known in every country of the civilized world, is now in again. Claude has the scoundrel roped, and he has no idea of letting him escape the penalty of his misdeeds. Even should Desmond get away, the excited populace would undoubtedly administer justice without waiting for the law's slower procedure.

With a "yo, heave ho!" Claude begins to pull the scoundrel up through the skylight. Sailors always "yo, heave ho," especially in the chorus of comic operas. So far as a layman can judge, the "yo, heave ho" is used to give the idea that "yo, heave ho!" brigade are working hard. Some poet should write on "The Man With the Yo, Heave Ho!"

A dog, foolishly allowed by the Turkish government to roam the streets of Tripoli, makes a hungry dive for a moth, which has alighted on the skylight, and the animal smashes through the glass, knocking over Claude just as he was about to have Desmond securely trussed up on the roof. Poor Rosamond again sees her lover baffled.

As the rope is released, the villain takes it on the run. It is a cardinal principle with Desmond to go while the going is good, and he puts the plan into execution right away. The ferocious dog, balked of its prey, is after the villain, and it looks as if Desmond will be gnawed considerably before he gets away.

But Desmond is a downy bird. He utilises his famous hat as a protector against the fumes of the moth balls, which the rug merchant has scattered around to protect his merchandise. The dog, not having on its hat, has no such recourse, and turns up its little toes as the camphor quickly suffocates it in that close room.

"I'm the boy!" cries Desperate Desmond, "and I'm the big smoke in this chimney." The villain is now at bay. Claude and the soldiers have determined to capture the villain at all costs, and the career of the international crook must soon come to an end. There is every prospect of a thrilling battle, and the only way to get full details is by looking at to-morrow's pictures.

Advice to the Lovelorn

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

COMBINE YOUR ENERGIES AND INCOMES

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am thirty and engaged to a man of twenty-eight. The young man in question is making $80 a month, while I earn $100 a month. We desire to marry, and he feels that we can live comfortably on the $80, and that there is no necessity for my keeping my position. I am not so anxious to work after I become married, but then how much better we could live on the $180 combined, and save, than we could on the $80. Will you give me your honest opinion of what you would do if you had to decide such an important step?

A CONSTANT READER OF YOUR ADVICE.

I WOULD continue the work you speak of, by all means. Daily occupation of this kind will greatly add to your conjugal happiness, besides insuring your independence, which is most important. In any case make the experiment. I know it is bound to succeed, and other married couples may follow your example. Peace and content follow after a long day's conscientious exertion. The quarrelsome discontent of many families would be greatly modified if each individual strove to accomplish some purpose or work.

INSIST ON THIS AT ONCE

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

If a young man kept company with a young lady for over a year and they quarreled and separated, would it be proper for him to say he wanted his letters returned and at the same time to send her letters back?

PERPLEXED.

YES, it is quite proper to send her letters back and also to ask for your own. Such matters should always be terminated in this way, properly and finally.

"WHEN POVERTY ENTERS THE DOOR"

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am a young man of twenty-one. I am deeply in love with a girl whom I know to be a flirt. She has promised to be my wife. I am earning $12 a week. Is that enough to support a family on?

IT depends entirely how you live. If you are both willing to be economical, you could just about manage on $12 a week.

However, I would advise that you wait. If the girl is a flirt you had better be sure of her BEFORE you marry her. A year would give you time to raise your salary and to test your love.

LET YOUR HEAD ADVISE

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I have been going to see a young lady who lives some forty miles from my home for the past year. She has told me that she does not know what love is, and that she never loved any one. She also has treated me coldly when I call. Do you think I am wasting my time? I like the girl, and have heard that she thinks a great deal of me.

R. J. A.

YOU certainly are not wasting your time. This is the kind of girl for whom to wait. Try to be more diplomatic. Make your visits a little less frequent for a while, and when she thinks you less ardent she will be only too anxious to get you back.

Of course, she does not know her own mind, but she will soon. Don't worry. Be willing to wait. Use your head and you will succeed.

"Ow," the man mocked her, "Princess 'igh and mighty, ain't it! Mustn't touch 'er little 'and in case it goes an' brikes!"

The hoarse voice ended in a curse, for a strong hand seized the brute by the collar and drew him back whimpering like a dog.

"You cut your hook, miss," a voice said in her ear, "and wait on the there pavement for Seaman Oates."

Clemency was conscious of a raised arm, before which the surging sea of humanity that surrounded her seemed to cleave.

There was a chemist's shop in the street, a dismal little shop, huddled in a corner. Blindly Clemency made for the light and the shelter it promised, and as she burst into the shop, almost before the peculiarly brazen tinkle of the bell with which the door was furnished had died away, the crowd of yelling men and youths and frowsy girls had swept by.

It was a woman who came out leisurely from the shop parlor at the summons of the bell.

A Harsh Smile

She looked at Clemency with an air rather of displeased abstraction than of curiosity, while the girl explained her predicament, and offered no word of sympathy, though she fetched her a glass of water.

"What was it? I wonder what the commotion could have been about?" Clemency said faintly as she sipped the water. "I thought at first it was a riot—a hunger riot"——

The woman's lips parted with a harsh smile.

"No, 'twas nought but the mad Elias, as they call him, I'm thinking," she said, with a strong Scottish accent. "A puir mad fool that preaches perneecious doctrines."

She brought down her hand on the battered counter in an angry gesture.

"There shud be a law agen haverers such as you," she said. "Ay, an' would be, but for the blind despotism o' an Erastian establishment that has its heel on all the releegious intelligence o' the country."

Her tirade was cut short, to Clemency's relief, by the entrance of the man who had called himself Seaman Oates. He was followed by Tring.

"You are all right, Clemency? Good Lord, for the moment I did not know what had happened to you!"

Clemency laughed at the adventure, though a moment since she had been on the verge of tears.

"It was a horrible moment," she said gayly, "and yet one does not altogether resent it. It seems almost something of a symbol—an augury for the future—being swept out and away with the surge of the crowd. . . ."

"An Unpleasant Symbol"

"An uncommonly unpleasant symbol. Your mysticism is a little beyond me, I confess, Clemency," Tring said. He was annoyed, and found it hard to conceal his annoyance. He had been badly knocked about, he had lost his hat and his watch and had suffered a moment's torture when he saw the girl swept away from him. "A piece of symbolism that might have merged into the very definitely unpleasant, but for Mr. Oates here," he repeated.

The man's hand went up to his forehead and he smiled in an expansive way.

"Toots, it was naethin," Oates said. "Ony man gifted by the Lord wi' strength could have done the same."

"And what was it ye did, Samuel?" demanded the woman behind the counter.

"Jest gi'ed that son o' Belial, Bob Bowd, a scrag i' the neck, sister," the man said over his shoulder.

"I am very grateful to you," Clemency said, conscious of a desire to laugh that was half hysterical. She put out her slim hand, and the man took it in a great paw, where it lay like a white flower on the brown palm. "I do not in the least know what I should have done without your help. Are the people of this neighborhood always so—so emotional?"

"Wal, miss, anythin' strange sets them off," he said.

His appearance was as remarkable as his speech; his calling was writ large upon him. Here in this frowsy little shop he seemed to emanate a breath of the sea. He was tall and burly, with a brown face gnarled and pitted as though carved from some wood of coarse ungenerous grain that had been left to the winds and the rains of innumerable days to color and polish. "An' this puir mad fule as calls himself Elias—his richt name bein' plain John Smith—he's new to them, ye ken. So, till they gits used to him like, they baits him.

"He is a harmless fule till he gets to preachin'," he said.

The woman behind the counter gave a harsh assent.

"Blind fools leadin' the blind," she said.

"Well, I hope your Southern neighbors don't treat this unfortunate as roughly as they treated us," Tring said.

He laughed, feeling in his waistcoat pocket with finger and thumb for a coin.

"Nay, nay, thankin' ye kindly all the same," the man said decidedly. "It was naethin' but my duty I did. An' now, if you'll be excusin' me, I shud be off afther the puir daftie, I'm thinkin.' Ye see he's a lodger o' ours, an' I'm in a manner o' speakin' responsible for him."

"I'd like to see this man," Clemency whispered to Tring. "Poor, mad man, we might help him."

Clemency Sees Life

"No, not even for you, my dear," he said. "You must really curtail your enthusiasm for to-night. I've got a cab waiting—Oates hailed it for me as we came along, and I'd like to get back to civilization."

He turned to the woman and smilingly laid the sovereign Oates had refused on the counter.

"That is for the conversion of your mad lodger, madam," he said. "Your brother told me something of him as we came along."

Tring hurried Clemency out to the waiting cab and Oates shut the door on them. Once again Clemency put out her hand to him.

"I shall not forget you, Mr. Oates," she said.

She gave a swift glance at the shop, where already the thin, sour-faced woman was bringing out the shutters; in the dimness above the shop she made out the legend:

H. BANNISTER, Chemist Box.

"The House of the Open Door will deal with H. Bannister," she said to Tring as she leaned back in the corner of the cab with a little sigh of satisfaction.

Clemency did not so much as notice his silence. The slow old four-wheeler, in whose interior seemed to hang the condensed odors of all the musty stables where it had found a temporary resting place, was passing now through streets the like of which she had never seen.

A scene glowing with life, life painted in crude colors, splashed from some master palette.

It was only when her eyes fell on the faces of the little knots of loafers who stared with insolent, aggressive faces at the unwonted spectacle of a cab in the narrow market thoroughfares that she felt a sense of almost terrified repulsion sweep over her.

As the cab lurched, suddenly brought to a pause at a street corner to let a heavily laden railway van pass, Tring felt the girl clutch his arm suddenly.

"Look—I believe that is the 'Mad Elias,'" she said.

Tring's eyes following the direction of her pointing finger had a momentary glimpse of a scene Rembrandtesque in its detail.

Uttered Wild Cry

"Mad—mad as they make 'em, evidently. I hope friend Oates—why, Clemency!"

He gave an exclamation of dismayed surprise, for the girl at his side had uttered a wild, hysterical cry and was clinging to him in a passion of tears.

"Clemency, my dear girl, what on earth has happened?"

His arm was around her; she lay sobbing on his shoulder as the cab rumbled on now into broader, less brilliantly illuminated thoroughfares.

"Nothing . . . nothing! Only the world is so strange, so horrible—and I am frightened—frightened!"

She became calmer presently and drew away from him, ashamed of her tears.

If the terror out of the past was to come linking hands with the terror of the present she must go mad, she told herself. And it was the terror of the past, the obsession of Africa, of those delirious dreams of her illness, that had leaped up and caught her by the throat at the mere sight of a fanatic preacher at a street corner; illuminated as he was by the red glow of a charcoal brazier.

She felt a sudden need of the protection of the man beside her stir within her.

She turned abruptly to Tring.

No Need for Delay.

"I—do you still—seeing what an hysterical fool of a woman I am—want to marry me?" she asked in a strangled voice.

"Yes." He answered her bluntly, deliberately refusing to dispute the form of her question.

She gave a quick, short laugh that cut at the heart of the listening man.

"Then please marry me quickly," she said. "As soon as it is possible. I—after all, there is not any real reason why we need delay, is there? And the contract will give us both an extraordinary freedom."

"That is as you wish and when you wish, Clemency," Tring said.

"I wish it now—soon, whenever it is possible! No, no! Don't touch me. I shall scream . . . I shall go mad. . . ."

They were back in the heart of the West again; the East lay behind like an ugly memory; the driver, who was old and bleary, had mistaken the obvious direct route through the Strand, that would have led them past their respective destinations, the great hotel dominating the river, standing back almost unpretentiously from the Strand, and the old ancient street running down to the river where Tring lived, and had taken them by some devious route into the very heart and centre of restaurant and theatre land.

She was calm now, if stillness and silence were indicative of calm; without moving his head he could see the pure white severity of her profile outlined against the dark background of the cab. To avoid seeing it he stared out at the gay crowds that the restaurants were disgorging, for a theatres were long since dark and deserted, the limelight turned off, the puppets restored to their boxes, the mummers scattered abroad.

Men and women, women and men—he saw the thing he did not wish to see on every side—the lovers, the husbands and wives.

What a fool he had been to impose this bondage on himself—what a fool!

He thought of what another man and woman in their position on the eve of what they contemplated would have been feeling, would have been thinking. Thoughts of their future home—their life together; the children who might be born to them to make the perfection of that home. And this woman at his side, this woman he loved, was thinking, not of him, not of his home, but of the home of miserable women she had never seen—the drab sisterhood of London's superfluous women.

Back at the Hotel.

And in his dumb fury his thoughts sought for a scapegoat and found it—in the person of the woman who had lectured that night.

The cab was rumbling into the court yard of the Majestic.

Tring, with a generous tip and an exorbitant fare, could afford to chafe even the vinegar-faced old Jarvey, and when he turned, Clemency was gone, with a fugitive good-night called, scarcely audible, over her shoulder.

Tring followed the rumbling cab out of the well-lit courtyard.

She had not even waited to hear his proposed plans regarding the forthcoming marriage.

Do You Know That—

Newspapers from Canton, Ohio, report a romantic wedding of a poor Norwegian cook to a local millionaire, Mr. Edward Langenbach. The cook, whose name is Rosa Jansen, won her husband through her skill in the culinary art. Mr. Langenbach engaged Miss Jansen as cook and was so delighted with the first meal she prepared that he proposed to her on the spot. The new cook was considerably astonished, but accepted him with equal promptitude. The millionaire lost no time, but immediately took out a marriage license, and the ceremony was performed an hour after the satisfactory meal had been placed on his table.

A suicide club has been discovered by the police in Kursk. The club had for its motto, "Death is the cure for all ills," but, as set forth in a little book of rules, candidates for membership had first of all to show that they had a substantial cause for wishing to die. A would-be candidate who presented himself with the weight of ten or more years of unhappy married life was received with open arms. Loss of fortune, incurable disease, and a record of ill luck all around were also excellent qualifications for membership.

There are, according to German official statistics, 7,000 persons in Europe who have attained their hundredth year. Bulgaria comes first on the list with 3,883 centenarians, then Roumania with 1,074. DESTINN OPERA STAR TO-NIGHT

"Madame Butterfly" will be the attraction at the Boston Opera House to-night. The popular and charming little opera of Japan will be sung by a very distinguished cast of artists from the Metropolitan Opera House, New York. Emmy Destinn will be Madame Butterfly and Hermann Jadlowker will sing Lieutenant Pinkerton. Polese, the Boston baritone, will take the part of Sharpless and Jeska Swartz will be the Suzuki.

"Madame Butterfly," it will be remembered, was a play by John Luther Long and David Belasco. Puccini, the composer, heard it and decided it would be an excellent opera. His judgment has been vindicated by the success of the work.

Among other interests that the opera has for Americans is the fact that it is the only grand opera in which the melody of the "Star Spangled Banner" is used.

TO-DAY'S STOCK MARKETS

WALL STREET PRICES FALL

NEW YORK, Dec. 4.—Irregularity marked the opening of the stock market to-day, this being followed by a downward movement which carried off the prices of a number of important stocks. Canadian Pacific, Reading and Union Pacific each lost ⅜. Reading had opened ⅛ higher, but a selling movement immediately developed which carried off the price.

Steel common opened at 63⅝, unchanged from Saturday's closing, but lost ½ on a few sales. The preferred was up ⅛.

Amalgamated copper and Erie preferred were unchanged, while Southern Railway and Lehigh Valley gained ⅛ each. Southern Pacific was carried off ⅝.

The curb opened quiet; 470 was bid for American Tobacco as against 495 bid for this stock on Saturday.

Americans in London were firm above New York parity. Canadian Pacific in London declined on profit taking.

SIAM KING CROWNS SELF.

BANGKOK, Dec. 4.—This city was in gala attire for the crowning of the King of Siam, Maha Vajiravudh. The King crowned himself in the presence of special embassies and native dignitaries.

STATE ST. NEWS FOR INVESTORS

Traders are looking to Washington for reasons to base their operations.

Several large pools have been able to liquidate in the last few days, and those operators who seem to make the most money in stocks are free to take either side of the market that may seem the most inviting within the next day or two.

Weird schemes for reforming business will furnish many opportunities for speculation. This is more important because the general foundations seem to have improved recently.

Recent market movements have proved that stocks are widely distributed and strongly held. There has been considerable public buying in the last few days. The people have millions of savings that they are eager to use in the stock market and are only awaiting an opportunity.

So much depends upon next year's crops that it is unsafe to look far ahead, but for the immediate future the outlook is brighter than it has been for months. It is true the United States has suffered the loss of a billion dollars in money as a result of the excessive crop of cotton and the partial failure of other crops, but that has been discounted in the market.

The confession of the McNamara brothers at Los Angeles is a matter of the highest importance to all business interests in the United States. The United States government has been afraid to proceed against organized labor, just as it was afraid to proceed against big conspiracies of capital, also, until one President tackled the Standard Oil Company.

True friends of organized labor rejoice at the situation. The fakirs who have been misleading laboring men and inflaming their minds against capital will now probably be retired, and organized labor, under decent leadership, will strike hands with organized capital in an honorable campaign for prosperity. Now that the politicians are placed in position where they may be brave enough to deal justly with both capital and labor, a great cloud has been lifted from the financial horizon.

By suppressing railroad issues the country its [illegible] suppressed and [illegible] Hadley commission has wisely declared that railroads are entitled to more liberal treatment, basing this decision on the belief that whatever may be their past record, even so, the last few years have demonstrated the wisdom of strict honesty in corporate management. All these favorable influences will be crystallized in public opinion and speeches in Congress within a short time. It may be that advance information has enabled State Street to discount them in the stock market. Much of the recent rise in stocks is hard to explain without believing that the leaders have been in possession of abstracts of important government papers.

One circumstance that should not be overlooked is the remarkable number of laboring men returning to Europe. A movement of this kind happened in the midst of the panic of 1907. Another feature is the boom that steamship companies are enjoying. Tonnage on the principal freight carriers is engaged well into the new year. Such booms always come in the midst of periods of trade depression, for they are caused by the extraordinary efforts made in every country to get business in every other country at the expense of prices. The present remarkable export business of the Steel Trust illustrates the workings of this business law.

INDIAN PAGEANT GREETS RULERS

BOMBAY, Dec. 4.—A brilliant fete, in which 26,000 children took part, was held here to-day in honor of King George and Queen Mary, who will be crowned Emperor and Empress of India at the Durbar.

The scene of to-day's festivities was a brilliant one. The uniforms of the British army officers together with the quaint dress of the native chieftains and the bright costumes of the royal party made a scene of magnificent splendor.

The royal visitors headed a royal procession a mile in length when they landed from their steamer.

The Medina arrived in ideal weather, the day being one of those brilliant hot days characteristic of this season in this section of the Indian Empire.

GIRL FALLS 20 FEET IN ELEVATOR WELL

Catherine Lane, nineteen, of No. 138 Ninth street, South Boston, stepped into the elevator well at the New England Screw Company, No. 17 Chardon street, to-day, and fell twenty feet to the basement. She was taken to the Relief Station.

Island Creek Coal Company

PREFERRED STOCK DIVIDEND

The Directors of the Island Creek Coal Company have declared the regular quarterly dividend of $1.50 per share upon the preferred capital stock of this Company, payable January 1, 1912, to stockholders of record at the close of business December 16, 1911.

INTEREST NOW IN AUTO SHOWS

By J. C. KERRISON.

Now that the big road races at Savannah during the past week have been settled, the enthusiastic motorist will naturally look ahead for the next event of interest on the motoring calendar. The season for racing has passed, so the next thing in order will be the automobile shows.

Plans have already been made for the holding of a big show in Madison Square Garden, which will be inaugurated on January 6 and extending up to and including the 20th. This, by the way, will be the last show to be held in this famous structure, as it has been sold and will be torn down during the coming year.

One may wonder what improvements over the present models the manufacturers have to offer, as it is hard to imagine how the motor car in its present state of efficiency can be improved upon. The body and style of the car may be changed, but when one looks at the automobile as it is, its symmetry and skilfulness of design, it can only seem that anything new can be only in the line of detail.

Ever since the inception of the automobile the high priced motor has been the favorite with those who could afford the best and thought that was none to good. Others wanted the medium priced motor which would give quality and service, but there are others who still rely on the old horse that are waiting for the inevitable development of the small-sized motor which will be within the price of those desirous of owning an automobile.

Therefore, it will be well during the coming show season to watch the development of the small motor, and which will eventually supersede and overshadow the higher-priced motors.

* * *

The ninth annual meeting of the American Automobile Association will be held at the Hotel Astor, New York city, tomorow evening, with an attendance greater than has ever before participated in the councils of the national organization of motorists. Officers of the association will be elected and other important business and routine will be gone over.

* * *

"A very slight alteration in the magneto will have a considerable effect in increasing the speed of the car," said Charles Splitdorf, head of the famous house of Splitdorf. "Advancing the magneto one tooth will increase the speed about five miles an hour, yet by advancing two teeth, a knock may result that will imperil every rod and bearing in the engine. Cautious experimenting is the only way to learn the correct adjustment."

The appointment is announced of Robert F. Russell as assistant engineer of the automobile department of the American Locomotive Company.

Mr. Russell comes to the Alco engineering staff from the Simplex Company, where for seven years he was in charge of the designing department. He is prominent in the engineering world and is considered an authority on both motor truck and car designs.

The latest mail communication from the Hupmobile world touring party—now on its way to Paris—came to the Hupp Motor Car Company from Cairo, Egypt, under date of November 3. The Tourists' letter says:

"Many cars have been driven up to the Pyramids, but a real rarity is the car that dares tackle the trip through desert sands to get near enough to the Sphinx for photographic purposes.

"But the Hupmobile went on with the Sphinx as its objective point. Motorists in Cairo advised against the trip. But performing unusual feats has become a Hupmobile habit. The car bucked into the sand, in which a person walking would sink to his ankles, and came to a halt on the brink of the pit in which the wonderful old Sphinx is located, posed for several pictures from many angles, then plugged its way back to firm ground near the great Pyramid. None of the garages in Cairo will permit its cars to attempt the trip."

ELKS PAY HONOR TO DEPARTED

Music, ceremony and oratory combined to make the annual memorial services of the Boston Lodge of Elks at the Boston Theatre of unusual impressiveness.

One of these incidents of the services was after the conclusion of what is known as the "formal memorial service," participated in by all the officers of the local organization of Elks, aided by the male quartet of the "Everywoman" Company, H. Lynne Wilson, Alfred Hallam, Harry Austin and George Van Vall.

Just as this ceremony was finished a dove was released from the back of the stage, the emblem of peace, which is one of the tenets of the Order of Elks, and it fluttered to an impromptu nest, what is known among the Elks as the "Elks' Rest." There it stayed for several moments only to flutter over the stage and back again to the nest and the rest. Time and time again it would hover about the stage only to go again to its haven of refuge almost directly over the footlights.

The ceremonies opened with a selection by the Fadettes of Boston Orchestra, Caroline B. Nichols conductor, entitled "Pomp and Circumstance." Then was presented a scenic effect, known as the "Exterior View of the Elks' Rest." Following came the opening ode. George W. Caruth, the chaplain of the order in Boston, offered prayer and then followed the formal memorial services.

BROWN BREAD RULES POUR IN

Now they are springing Daffydils on the Brown Bread game. Here is a sample:

"If Smith was born in Saugus, where was Brown Bread?"

Think it over.

All this goes to show that the AMERICAN'S competition for the best brown bread recipe is as busy as a buzz-saw with a pine log. Housewives are tickled with the idea. They have a chance to get a cash reward—handy now that Christmas is coming—also to learn some new brown bread recipes.

The AMERICAN offers a prize of $5 for the best brown bread recipe and five prizes of $1 each for the five next best recipes.

The recipes are coming in to the Brown Bread Editor like flakes in a snow storm. Here are some of the latest batch:

Here Are the Recipes.

Three cups Indian meal, 1 cup bread flour, ⅓ cup molasses, ½ cup white sugar, 1 teaspoon salt, 2 teaspoons soda, 3 cups buttermilk; can add 1 cup raisins or 1 cup pork scraps if you like. Steam six hours.

M. B. SMALL.
No. 83 Hampshire, street, Holyoke.

Two cups left-over bread, 3 cups water, 1 cup best molasses, 1½ cups each, corn meal, rye flour and graham flour; 2 teaspoons salt, 3 teaspoons soda, ½ pound seeded raisins; put bread to soak in the water over night or until soft, mash fine; add molasses. Mix the different kinds of flour separately with the soda and salt; wash raisins and add to the mixture; put half in a three-pound lard pail, well greased and with a tight cover, place pail in the pot of boiling water, three parts full, and cover again and steam three hours. Besides using up all kinds of bread this recipe with the addition of currants and all kinds of spices and citron will make an excellent plum pudding.

MRS. JOHN BATES.
No. 14 Suffolk street, Cambridge.

One and one-half cup graham flour, 1½ cup rye flour, 1 cup of Indian meal, 1 cup white flour, 1 teaspoonful salt, 1 cup molasses, 1 cup raisins, 1 teaspoonful soda. Dissolve in a little hot water. Mix together with luke-warm water, and have it as stiff as cake. Steam five hours.

MRS. J. KENNEY.
No. 177 Centre street, Roxbury.

One heaping teaspoon of soda, ½ of a cup of sugar, 1 cup of Indian meal, 2 cups of rye meal, 1 cup of raisins, 1 egg, 1 teaspoon of butter (melted), ¾ of a cup of molasses, 1½ cups of sour milk. Mix and then steam four hours.

MISS MARGARET KEOHANE.
No. 109 Cedar street, Roxbury.

Grind 1 quart of ends of trimmings of loaf bread, soak in 1 quart of sour milk. After well soaked add ½ cup dark molasses, 1 cup Indian meal, 1 cup rye flour, 2 teaspoons salt, 1 teaspoon ginger, 1 pint sour milk with 1 rounding teaspoon soda. Steam three hours.

HATTIE MASON.
No. 355 Green street, Cambridge.

Two cups of Indian meal, 1½ cups graham flour, 1 cup wheat flour, teaspoon salt, teaspoon soda dissolved in little hot water, 1 cup molasses, 3 cups sweet milk. Steam three and one-half hours.

Reciprocity Is Hailed by All as the Sure Road to Peace and Prosperity

The current movement for the inauguration, on the part of the United States Government, of a policy of reciprocity with all civilized nations, was begun on the 23rd of September by the publication in the London Daily Mail of an interview with William R. Hearst on that subject.

This interview was followed up by a series of editorials printed in the AMERICAN and all the Hearst newspapers—and its argument for American trade expansion was specifically reinforced by the AMERICAN'S editorial on November 15th, of which Representative Stanley said—quoting a phrase of Cecil Rhodes:—"It was thought and written in the language of Continents."

Since the 15th of November the AMERICAN has received a thousand assurances from statesmen and men of affairs at home and abroad that its campaign for general American reciprocity points the surest road to international peace and prosperity. The highest authorities in politics, economics and finance acclaim this policy as the natural and reasonable solution of the grave national problem created by the rise in the cost of the necessaries of life.

The new Pan-American Chamber of Commerce was incorporated a few days ago with headquarters in New York, to increase trade between the United States and South and Central America, and "to develop more friendly political relations."

One of its influential incorporators, Mr. Julie F. Sorzano, says that this institution is "in full accord with the reciprocity ideas of William R. Hearst," and declares his belief that "those ideas will open the way to great commercial benefits for the whole of the Western Hemisphere."

On the 18th of November the AMERICAN was authorized to say that President Taft was a firm believer in the application of the principle of trade reciprocity to all the nations of the earth, and that he would probably send a supplemental message to Congress, making recommendations on the subject.

Says Senator Cummins: "It is gratifying to see the Hearst newspapers bringing to the front the vast commercial opportunities that will be opened to the United States on the completion of the Panama Canal."

And Senator O'Gorman says: "I would look with favor on reciprocity agreements with all nations. Reciprocity with Argentina would weaken the hold that the Beef Trust has upon the American consumer."

The Speaker of the House says: "If we had put this general reciprocity idea into effect long ago, we should now have the bulk of the South and Central American trade. I am glad that Mr. Hearst has taken up the fight to get it."

Mr. A. Barton Hepburn, president of the New York Chamber of Commerce, says: "I am heartily in favor of establishing the closest possible reciprocal relations with Germany. It also seems to me that our Government is culpably at fault in failing to cultivate South and Central American trade."

The President of Columbia University—returning from his temporary occupancy of a lectureship at the University of Berlin—declares that he has every reason to believe that the German Government is in a receptive mood on the reciprocity question. He says he is "in favor of a larger extension of commercial reciprocity"—with South American countries and otherwise.

Few public men are so well acquainted with actual commercial and political conditions in South America as is Mr. J. C. Hamlin, recently a candidate for the United States Senatorship from Maine. He says: "I know of no agency better adapted to promote the cause of general reciprocity than the journalistic organization of Mr. Hearst. The press and people of South America will meet him more than half way. The issue is the most important issue before the country to-day—and this reciprocity program should be one of the leading planks in the next Democratic National platform."

The following are some of the many favorable statements concerning the reciprocity movement made to representatives of this newspaper by diplomatic representatives of foreign countries:

Count von Bernstorff, the German Ambassador at Washington, declares that he has "no hesitation in saying that any proposal for reciprocal trade relations that should be made by the United States to Germany would be received and considered in the most friendly spirit."

The Brazilian Ambassador, Senor Domicio de Gama, says: "The time has come for Brazil and other South American countries to turn their attention toward the possibility of reciprocity with the United States. As things now stand, the United States buys five times as much from Brazil as Brazil buys from the United States. There is no reason why that situation should continue."

The Chilian Minister, Senor Don Eduardo Suarez, says that "Chili stands ready to do anything that can possibly be done to bring about closer trade relations with the United States."

Dr. Salvador Castillo, the Nicaraguan Minister to the United States, is "absolutely in favor of such a reciprocity treaty as has been proposed by Mr. William R. Hearst."

The Venezuelan Minister, Senor Don Ezequiel Rojas, says: "If the United States should be willing to make a larger market for the things we export and to send us more of the goods we import from this country, I am certainly in favor of making a reciprocity treaty that will help along such a course." A similar statement has been made by the Bolivian Minister.

It is known in Washington that correspondence has actually begun between diplomatic representatives of South and Central American countries and their home governments—to forward this movement for the freeing of American continental commerce.

As to the success of the movement, why need there be any doubt? All reason, all experience, all political and economic science are at one in this matter. Long ago it should have been accomplished. The thing that was lacking was nothing but patient and persistent advocacy. That thing it now has—and will continue to have.

Said the London Telegraph of November 16, speaking of the prospect of the success of this cause: "The Hearst newspapers have by far the largest circulation of any group of newspapers in the United States, and Mr. Hearst himself is probably the most powerful journalistic factor in the country. His campaign for general reciprocity will undoubtedly awaken great interest. It is also true that what Mr. Hearst, through his newspapers, aims to accomplish is generally achieved."

Louis D. Brandeis on McNamara Case

"This is a regeneration—this is one of the things that is going to help unionists and not harm them. It may be like performing a serious operation, but after it is performed it clears the way."

(Reprinted from yesterday's Sunday AMERICAN.)

By LOUIS D. BRANDEIS.

(Copyright, 1911, by Boston Sunday AMERICAN. All rights reserved.)

Mr. Clarence S. Darrow is entitled to the gratitude of the American people for his courage and good judgment in advising his clients to plead guilty.

If these prosecutions had proceeded to a trial, long-continued as it must have been, the result would have been most serious to our social and industrial conditions.

The strain upon the relations of capital and labor would have been such as to greatly increase the difficulties which now exist in finding some proper basis of adjustment between employer and employe.

A verdict of guilty would never have satisfied a large part of the American people, and the resulting doubt would have found expression in attacks upon our courts of a character to endanger our present institutions.

Mr. Darrow's courageous and noble act deserves the highest appreciation, and the clients who followed his advice should have done what they could to make reparation for their grievous wrong.

Stunning Blow to the Labor Leaders.

The close of the McNamara prosecution by a full confession naturally appeared to the labor leaders at the first moment as a stunning blow. I am convinced that upon mature consideration they will regard the event as one which will ultimately lead to a strengthening of the unions and not to a weakening of their standing in America.

The cause of unionism is one which must advance. It is an essential part of our present industrial system. Without unions the cause of democracy in America would have suffered far more than it has from the reckless abuse of power and the oppressive methods of the great financial and industrial interests.

With the great increase of capitalistic power there should have been a corresponding increase in the power of the union. That increase is bound to come if, and when, the unions recognize that they are, in the most essential particulars, their brothers' keepers.

It is not surprising, in view of the many groundless and harsh attacks upon unions, and upon the laboring man in general, that union leaders and members should be impelled by sympathy to take the side of their brothers, right or wrong.

The spirit that prompts them to this action is ordinarily most commendable, but, as a matter of fact, it is a serious obstacle to the recognition by the community of the inestimable service which the unions render, not only to their members, but ordinarily to the trade in which they are engaged, and to the community as a whole.

The Los Angeles incident, in making union members pause to consider their proper attitude towards members charged with improper practices, cannot fail to mark a turning point in unionism, and to my mind will lead eventually to great growth and increased usefulness and success.

Every act of a union member which brings discredit upon a union is treason to his organization and to his class. Unionists, leaders and members alike, must admit this proposition. They have at times been prone, in their laudable sympathy with their brothers, to condone offences.

Whenever the union itself becomes the severest judge of the conduct of unionists and undertakes to enforce the proposition that misconduct by a union member must be punished as an attack upon unionism, the position of unions will be infinitely improved and the most serious obstacle to their fullest development will be removed.

Unions Should Have a Standard

The unions ought to set up as a standard conduct unbecoming a union member. And when a man shirks his work, or does any act which is contrary to law, he ought to be told, "You are injuring the union; you are not injuring your employer—you are injuring the union." Of course that is true of anybody who belongs to any class or club.

If a Harvard boy, you know, misbehaves himself, every Harvard man in a sense is injured. Whatever judgment is going to be passed on union men, therefore the severest critics of men, the severest critics of union men ought to be their own mem- it is treason to them.

In my opinion, after the Los Angeles incident, the significance of this truth will gain recognition. The unionists, leaders and privates alike, will realize more fully the importance of keeping clear the record of their unions. The most serious charge against a member of the union will be recognized to be conduct unbecoming a trade unionist.

Some people say that to achieve industrial greatness we must conduct manufacturing enterprises that call for a reckless class of men, that men who do a certain kind of work necessarily are daredevils.

Now, whether that is so or not—it is not a question of being a daredevil. They ought to be made to feel the solidarity of the class and their obligation to other men.

If the individual said anything that reflected on the movement or tended to retard its development I would have the local union compel him to live up to a certain standard or fine him.

Or, if the local union didn't, then discipline the local, or if the international refused to, then discipline the international through the American Federation of Labor.

Now Divide Sheep from Goats.

In all my dealing with labor matters I have been trying to impress upon the leaders that one thing that I have said here. If there is anything wrong with labor—I mean if the conduct is wrong—it ought not to be left to outsiders who are largely opposed to labor, or at least not in sympathy with it, and who don't understand, to point out what is wrong. It is the labor men themselves that ought to separate the sheep from the goats.

They ought to do it every time there is an act of violence, or any act which you and I, sitting calmly and judicially, would not approve—in every such case they ought not to let the employers or the public get after labor and point it out. The thing to do would be for the labor leaders to say: "Here, we can't permit you to do a thing which injures you and us."

This is a regeneration—this is one of the things that is going to help unionists and not harm them. It may be like performing a serious operation but after it is performed it clears the way.

Now these men, when it comes to sympathy, these men who have been guilty of violence have been probably exasperated terribly. Either they have by their own acts, or by somebody who is near them.

It is the very essence of development for the laboring man, however, that merits and demerits should be recognized by his fellows. The very idea of unionism is that men bind themselves together.

Now, any one man who is pulling down that union will destroy it if he is strong enough. They have got to lift him up. They should say, "You have got to be lifted up or have got to sever your connection with the union. You can't be a member of this union and misbehave."

No strike in America of any importance can be won without public opinion behind it. It would be unanswerable, the arguments in favor of a union are absolutely unanswerable, if the union behaves. And, of course, that means if the individual members behave.

"That Is Treason to the Union."

But you have got to have the union come out and say, "That is treason to the union. We are punishing you for treason to the union—not as between you and your employer—that is a different thing—but you can't do a flagrantly wrong thing without injuring every one of us."

Now, just to see what a difference that would make on the ground in the appeal to the men. When you appeal to a man on the ground that he is injuring you, all that bitterness there is in him will vanish. He feels the bitterness against his employer, but when he is told, "You are injuring your class," it is a different matter.

The noblest thing about unionism has been the sacrifice which a large number of men have been able to make, sacrificing in their own families in order to maintain a principle for the ultimate good.

Why should they turn around and let some miserable fellow go forward, largely through ignorance, but go forward and injure the whole movement? They can't possibly gain anything by it—and the trouble is that they always do injury.

They must have a clear issue that they are going to enforce compliance with law and compliance with trade decency and obligations, and that, when the employer has any fault to find with anybody that he can turn to them with a consciousness that that question will be decided, if anything leaning backward against the union man, and not with a prejudice against the employer.

This will apply not only to acts of violence and other serious infractions of the law, but to their conduct as workingmen, particularly in the matter of efficiency. It must be the purpose of the unions to develop their members, both as men and as workmen.

Only One Way for the Unions.

Some labor leaders seem to be impressed with the idea that they have got to stand by their men. That is not the way to do it. They have got to stand by them in the sense that nobody shall be sacrificed improperly, but they ought to say, "If a member of my organization misbehaves it is of more importance to us that he be disciplined than it is to the employer."

The first great place where that presents itself is in connection with acts of violence. We have had relatively few of those in Massachusetts, but they have had a great many of them elsewhere.

Now the other thing is in connection with the quality or quantity of work. There is only one way, to my mind, in which the union will get its own, and that is by making membership in a union practically a sort of badge of nobility—so that a fellow will realize then that it is noblesse oblige, you know—just as in the army or navy to engage in conduct unbecoming to a gentleman is the worst charge that anybody can bring.

One of the most serious charges that can be brought against a unionist should be that he does not maintain the standard of the union in respect to the quantity or quality of work properly to be expected from him. Here again every unionist should be his brother's keeper and acts or omissions which reflect upon the reputation of the union or unionism are treason to the cause.
